EDITOR'S PREFACE

The purpose of The World Film Encyclopedia is to fill the long-felt need of a really comprehensive and universal film guide. The scope of cinematography has grown beyond all original conceptions, and the entertainment side is now so much a part of the daily life of the world that the possession of such a volume as this has become a necessity. That such a work should be produced was inevitable, and it has been planned definitely on broad lines to be of constant interest and ready service to the vast and ever-growing numbers of cinema patrons.

Much nonsense has been talked about films ever since films began, but even a casual glance through this book will show to the discerning reader that the whole world is very much alive to screen possibilities and that the makers of films have behind them a record of which they need not be ashamed.

That there have been bad and indifferent films it would be foolish to deny—but there have been many good ones, or the industry would long ago have suffered an ill fate, a fate that it would have deserved, if the level of screen entertainment had been consistently low. As to the future, cinema-goers themselves have it in their power to see that the quality level is maintained and improved, though everything points to the fact that producers are fully aware of what is expected of them. It is my belief that there is no limit to what they may yet achieve by inspiration and faith in their craft, and in this reflection there is cause for satisfaction.

In the industry itself there is a fine zest—the same quality that meant so much in the making of this book. Without it no undertaking can succeed. Coupled with this, no expense has been spared in the endeavour to produce a film guide that is universal in the true sense of the word. The world has been thoroughly combed for the information and contributions necessary for so complete a work, and a large and loyal staff of experts has worked incessantly to make The World Film Encyclopedia as comprehensive and accurate as it is possible to be. To all who have taken any part in this production I owe my gratitude.

I have sought to make the book not only a valuable work of reference but also a source of entertaining and instructive features, dealing with the varied aspects of films and film-making—in short, the best screen guide yet published. Reference to the list of contents and to the pages themselves will, I am sure, confirm that this ambitious ideal—formulated to meet a wide variety of tastes—has been brought within the scope of practical achievement.

A word or two about the beautiful illustrations will not be out of place. The art plates have been chosen to illustrate the text, and variety has been successfully aimed at, for I have included a number of subjects not generally found in smaller and less complete reference books. In conclusion it is safe to say that The World Film Encyclopedia is unequalled for its quality of production and the comprehensiveness of its contents, and I am confident that it will be received with pleasure and enthusiasm by those who derive recreation and profit from the great art of the cinema.

How Films Began

There have been many versions of the origin of motion pictures; there have been many claimants of the original invention. The man to whom the honour should really go—was William Friese-Greene, a London photographer. His claim to the invention has been established beyond all doubt. In this article his son, who is now Britain's foremost cameraman, employed by British International Pictures, describes the early experiments and results when films were young.

by

Claude Friese-Greene

Films are so much a part of our everyday lives that few people ever give a thought to their invention. Ask any cinema-goer when moving pictures were invented; ask any so-called enthusiast the name of the inventor; ask about the earliest "talkies." You will be surprised at the answers (if any) you will receive.

For years there have been disputes about who invented motion pictures. I can tell you right at the beginning that my father, William Friese-Greene, was the first to apply for and obtain a patent for a moving picture camera in June, 1889; and a later patent, to make it possible to produce motion pictures as we know them to-day. (British Patent No. 10,131, June 1889). Yet long before that year, in 1885, my father had alighted on the secrets of the motion picture.

It is with all due modesty that I place on record the fact that my father was an extraordinary genius; like many other men with fertile brains, he did not get his reward.

It was in 1887 that my father conceived the idea of linking up the newly-invented phonograph of Edison Bell with photographed movement. In 1889, after he had been struggling month in and month out to perfect this idea, he alighted on a solution and sent a description of it to Edison. He asked the American to co-operate with him and produce talking pictures. That was in 1889.

Mr. Edison, being a shrewd man, was obviously interested in such a project. He sent a request for the drawings of the camera patent; but nothing further was heard from the Edison officials.

First, however, let me tell you of my father's early days. William Friese-Greene was born at Bristol on September 7, 1855 and was educated at the
How Films Began

Blue Coat School, Clifton. He was very young when he became interested in photography, then at the beginning of its development. It was in 1882 that my father and John Arthur Roebuck Rudge, who had devised a projection lantern, which he called the Bio-Phantoscope, joined forces. Rudge incidentally was the first man to run an electrically-propelled boat (his own invention) up the River Avon, at Bath. In St. Michael's Cemetery, Bath, there is a tomb on Rudge's grave, with an inscription recording his inventions, a tablet to the joint memory of Rudge and my father has been affixed to the wall near the house where Rudge lived in Bath. Rudge produced what he called "Life in the Lantern," using 4 by 5 inch glass plates, with an oscillating shutter, made of two leaves and opening and closing from the centre. As the shutter closed over one plate the next plate was advanced between the light and the lens, and this gave the illusion of animation.

It was this device that gave my father his first idea for motion photography. He made several improvements on Rudge's invention, and in 1885 gave an exhibition before the Photographic Society of Great Britain. Rudge, by this time, had died and my father had to continue his experiments alone.

Two years later my father had still further improved his lantern. He was a very successful photographer in Piccadilly, London. Further fame and notoriety came his way when he drew such large crowds to his studio by the exhibition of his "moving pictures" that the police compelled him to stop the exhibition.

I want you to notice that I stress the fact that he was a successful photographer. He had money then. But so keen was he on his invention that he had lost every penny and had actually been imprisoned for debt before he died dramatically while addressing a meeting of film men at the Connaught Rooms, London, on May 5, 1921.

The search for a suitable flexible material for negative and positive prints gave my father a great deal of anxiety. He realized that true motion picture photography could never be obtained satisfactorily with glass as a basic material. Then, in 1888, he found what he had been seeking. He devised a camera that enabled him to take pictures in series on strips of sensitized paper of a length as great as fifty feet. It was with this camera that he photographed a street scene at Brighton that gave him proof over an Edison claim in the United States courts more than twenty years later.

It was for this case that my father made his first and only visit to America in 1910. This action definitely proved that my father, and not Thomas A. Edison, first conceived and invented the cinematograph camera, and that it was also W. Friese-Greene who first thought of linking sound and photographed action together.

When the case was heard in the United States Circuit Court, South District, in December, 1910, that street scene at Brighton was invaluable.

With a camera built for him by R. Chipperfield of Clerkenwell Green, London, my father was able to take photographs on a sensitized strip of paper, at the rate of seven or eight a second. But the problem was, when the reproduction of life motion was needed, how to prevent the paper from breaking.

A solution was found in celluloid, which had then begun to appear as a substitute for the glass plates used by photographers. One of the manufacturers of celluloid was Mr. Alexander Parker, of Birmingham. My father got in touch with him and told him of his problem. The two men worked and experimented until in that same year another camera was invented, that was able to take celluloid film. This was what was known as a stereoscopic or di-optic camera. It had two lenses side by side, but could be used as a single camera merely by closing one lens aperture.

It was in January, 1889 that my father took his first motion picture with celluloid. This was a scene in Hyde Park, showing Mr. Alfred J. Carter strolling with his son, Bert. This strip of film, by the way, was also used in the American courts to prove my father’s case against The Edison Trust.

There was one objection to this camera—the size of the picture. The next advance was a camera constructed for him by A. Lege and Co., of Hatton Garden, London, and delivered in the summer of 1889. This used tooth sprockets and was designed to run perforated film, slightly less than 2½ inches wide. Twelve pictures a second could be taken with this camera, and its first experiment was a scene in the King’s Road, Chelsea, early in 1890.

1887—The First Cine Camera

In association with Mortimer Evans, an engineer, my father obtained a patent for a “camera for taking pictures at a rapid rate.” This was on June 21, 1889, so that it was on this date that (officially) the first cinematograph camera was born. Few people were very excited about this invention. In fact not until November 15, 1889, when “The Optical Magic Lantern Journal” gave the news to the world, did anybody realize the possibilities of the invention. Although the daily and weekly newspapers commented on the article, the whole idea was so fantastic and far-fetched that sneers, rather than cheers, welcomed the invention. Let me give you a short extract from that article of only 43 years ago.

It was headed A Startling Optical Novelty-Photometric and Phon-Photometric Effects. “Imagine the sensation,” the article said, “that would be produced, if the whole of the recent Lord Mayor’s Show were to be presented upon a screen exactly as seen by a person stationed at one particular point looking across the street. The house on the opposite side would remain stationary and the procession would pass along, each minute movement, as it actually took place at this given point, being represented.

“The name of Friese-Greene, the eminent photographer of Brook Street, W., will become familiar throughout the land in connection with an invention by which all these effects can be produced. He has invented a peculiar kind of camera—to outward appearances not unlike an American organette, handle and all—about one foot square. The instrument is pointed at a particular moving object and, by turning the handle, several photographs are taken each second. These are converted into transparencies and placed in succession upon a long strip, which is wound on rollers and passed through a lantern of peculiar construction (also the invention of Mr. Friese-Greene) and, by its agency, projected upon the screen. When the reproduction of speech is also desired, this instrument is used in conjunction with the phonograph.”
Do you hear a faint echo of the word “talkies” drifting back through the ages?

But although he had gone so far, nobody else would get any farther. Unbelievable though it seems to-day, nobody could then see the commercial possibilities of this invention. Certainly the War Office did go so far as to ask him to go for a whole day to the Isle of Wight to conduct experiments with this new camera, for which he was paid the munificent sum of five guineas. The first report contained the momentous statement that the new invention “might be useful for balloon photography in wartime.” Shades of 1914-1918!

My father had spent no less than £10,000 of his own money on experiments. What was worse, he had neglected his previously prosperous photographer’s business to further his invention. In February, 1891, his home and practically everything else he had were sold to pay off his debts. Even this failed to quash his enthusiasm. He knew that he had a marvellous invention and he was anxious for the world to realize its possibilities.

Colour on films was the next thing to which he set his active brain. As far back as 1903, when I was only a child of five, he had perfected a colour scheme of cinematography. He took a picture of me in our garden at Brighton. I was waving a Union Jack (it was just after the Boer War) and the red, white and blue came out remarkably distinctly.

I have always felt that his true worth has never been thoroughly appreciated. One possibly does not expect the general public to appreciate his work, but those men in the industry, to whom my father’s invention has meant so much, might have been keener to have praised where praise was due. Don’t imagine for one moment that I am ungrateful, but I do feel that a little more might have been done. In 1916, for instance, when I was with the Cinematograph Branch of the Royal Flying Corps, my father’s resources were so low that a public subscription was opened. The sum of £136 os. 2d. was raised.

Five years later he died, at the age of 65, after making a moving speech, full of sincerity and sound commonsense, to a group of film renters, exhibitors and producers. British films were in a sad state at that time. Wrangling and differences of opinion only accentuated the plight of the industry. My father endeavoured to get these people to see the folly of wrangling. He tried to make them realize that co-operation was the only thing to prevent America getting the whole of the film monopoly. He altered the tone of that meeting and then went back to his seat and died.

Two policemen took him to the nearest mortuary. In his pocket was a cheap, well-worn leather purse. Inside were a few coins that came to the grand total of one shilling and tenpence—all the money he had in the world.

FILM CENSORS

In all the story of films, there is no man so much attached as a film censor—whatever the country in which he works. Systems and rules differ all over the world; our contributor here studies the methods used in Great Britain and in America.

by JOHN K. NEWNHAM

Films are the world's most strictly censored form of entertainment. Theatre censorship is far more lax. Wireless programmes are left entirely to the discretion of the broadcasting companies. Books may be published with very little fear of police orders for withdrawal.

But every film that is generally released has to be passed by a board of censors, whatever the country, whatever the type of film. There are no hard and fast rules governing film censorship. They vary in every country; in America they vary in every state. Even one censor may appear to vary his views from time to time, passing one picture, yet refusing to pass another dealing with the same subject.

There can be no fixed rules, for the simple reason that so much depends on the way in which a subject is handled. Nowadays, film directors are getting more and more adept in making daring scenes with such ingenuity that they get past the censor.

So far as England is concerned, the British Board of Film Censors is the only actual censorship board, though local authorities also have the power of rejecting pictures or passing those not given a certificate by the censor.

The British censorship board is an entirely independent and impartial unit, although it was formed by the film industry itself. That was in 1913.

No members of the film trade are permitted to work for this board. The examiners who view the pictures must never have worked for a film company nor must they be related to any such member. These precautions are necessary in order that there shall be no risk of prejudice or favouritism on the part of the men seeing the films.

Moreover, the board is self-supporting. A nominal price is charged for viewing every film, and the fee works out at £2 per thousand feet for general films (cheaper for short travel pictures).

The average feature film is about 6,000 feet in length. About six million feet of film is handed over to the censor for viewing every year. To be precise, in 1931 (the latest statistics compiled up to the moment), the total footage of film submitted amounted to 5,585,908, comprising 1,951 subjects. The previous year, 1930, the amount of footage was even more, totalling 7,209,306 feet, covering 2,275 subjects.

Thus the censors are not directly dependent on the trade for their wages.
There are four examiners at the censor's office. Examiners are chosen, not because of any particular knowledge of films but for their sound common-sense. They must be educated and must be able to use their own discretion.

The board has had only three presidents. The first was Mr. C. A. Redford; on his death he was followed by Mr. T. P. O'Connor; and when "T. P." died, the present president, the Right Hon. Edward Shortt, took his place.

The president himself rarely finds it necessary to view a picture. This happens only when the examiner refuses to pass a film and the film company makes an appeal, in which event the film is referred to the president.

Films, however, are rarely rejected, and you may be sure that a member of the censorship board is likely to be annoyed if anyone refers to films he has rejected. For the president is the only man able finally to reject a picture. As a general rule, when a picture is turned down, the film company is merely informed that the censor does not consider it fit for public exhibition.

The film company may then make certain alterations, and re-submit the picture. The censor (this term is the one invariably used when referring to the censorship board) is usually very reasonable. Scenes to which objection is taken are pointed out and it is often quite a simple matter for these sequences to be cut out without harming the continuity of the story.

Films are shown in a private theatre at the censor's office. In addition to viewing the film on the screen, the examiners have a script of the story to help them. In the very early days of the talkies they had no sound apparatus and they were compelled to rely entirely upon this script for their guidance. But this defect was soon remedied.

Incidentally, it is rather interesting to note that, to the English film censor, there is no such thing as a talkie. While newspapers the world over have argued about the use of this term for sound films, the censor has decided the matter for himself and all talking pictures are termed "auditory films." Even talking picture apparatus is officially called the "auditory projector."

List of "Must Nots"

There is a long, but very elastic, list of subjects to which the censor takes objection. The elasticity of this list has caused a great deal of confusion among those people who imagine that the censor works under a rigid set of rules.

In one picture an examiner may object to "vamping." And immediately this art of Eve becomes one of the list of "mustn'ts," though obviously it applies only in very exceptional circumstances.

One picture containing a bedroom scene may be given a certificate; yet another one, also containing a bedroom scene, may be turned down. This has happened more than once and on the surface it has appeared that the censor has blundered. He has not necessarily done so at all. In one film of recent showing the bedroom scene was quite innocuous; but in another shown at the same time a similar scene had to be cut out because the dialogue immediately made this sequence suggestive.

There are certain subjects which are entirely taboo. Under the heading of "Religion," films have been refused certificates because they have shown the materialized form of Christ; blasphemy, and comic treatment of religious subjects; irreverent quotations of scriptural phrases; sacred rites and ceremonies and travesties of religious rites; themes portraying the hereafter; and the Salvation Army shown in an unfavourable light.

Under the heading of "Political," films have been returned for alterations because of references to royal personages; offensive political propaganda; and the representation of living personages.

Exception has been taken, under the heading of "Military," to British officers and forces shown in a disgraceful light; British officers in equivocal situations; and uncivilized acts of warfare.

Many scenes have had to be cut from films because they have offended the social code. These subjects have included: drunken women and gross drunkenness of men; "orgy" scenes; indecent dancing; habitual youthful depravity; accosting and soliciting; unacceptable vulgarity; unpleasant details of medical operations; immodest scenes of girls undressing; companionate marriage and "free love."

Several film scenes have been cut out because they have infringed the censor's rules by introducing hanging scenes, preparations for suicide, and methods of crime open to easy imitation; murderous gang fighting (remember that Scarface had some difficulty in being passed in many countries); and severed human heads.

Many other incidents have met with the disapproval of the censor, including such scenes as human sacrifices; cruelty to animals and birds; scenes of torture; agonizing scenes of martyrdom; self torture with knives; and prolonged and gross brutality and bloodshed.

These are not hard and fast rules. Each incident I have mentioned has actually been introduced into pictures and cut out by the censor's orders.

Several such incidents have been allowed in other films, probably because of different treatment. But the list I have enumerated gives a broad idea of the large number of items that the film producer should avoid if he wants his films to gain a certificate.

It must be remembered that the censor is bearing in mind a large public of all types, from sophisticated Londoners to children. He gives the picture an "A" (adult) certificate if he considers it suitable only for grown-ups and not for children. This picture is technically not supposed to be seen by a child unless accompanied by an adult. If the picture is deemed suitable for grown-ups and children alike, it is given a "U" (universal) certificate.

The censor's decision, however, is not legally final. Local councils have the last say in the matter. As a general rule, they accept the censor's decision without question. Sometimes a local watch committee will step in and demand to see every picture due for local showing. This happened in Beckenham, Kent, during 1932, much to the amusement of press and public. Films which had passed the censor with ease were sometimes rejected entirely. Even a Mary Pickford film was criticized and allowed to be shown only after the word "rat" had been expunged from one scene!

On the other hand, films which have not passed the censor may be shown if permission can be obtained from the local council. Thus, the Barbara Stanwyck film, The Miracle Woman, did not obtain a certificate because it turned stately hymns into jazz (it was a skit on Aimee McPherson). Yet this picture was shown in many towns and cities throughout England and was a great success.

One of the most amusing cases on record is that of a certain English watch committee in a district where there was a cinema for sale. Four members of the committee wanted to buy it; one of them was victorious. Whether the subsequent events were deliberate or merely coincidence, is hard to say; but the fact remains that the very first picture booked for this cinema was frowned upon by the watch committee. For a time, it looked as if it would not be passed for local showing. The film company putting out the picture, however, succeeded in getting it passed.

Another strange story of local “censorship” concerns the cinema manager who booked a film at a figure which he afterwards regretted. It was too high. But the bargain had been made and it seemed certain that he would have to pay the price.

Then he heard that there were certain scenes in this film at which the censor had rather frowned before passing. He seized his chance. He told the local chief constable, who has the power of banning a film. In this case, this one did so.

The film company objected. They took the matter to the watch committee and demanded that the film should be seen by them. The watch committee saw the picture and cancelled the ban. The film was shown at another cinema.

Nowadays, the English film-producing companies find that it pays them to submit the scenario to the censor before actually producing the picture. From October, 1931, to October, 1932, 74 scenarios were submitted. In one or two instances, certain alterations were suggested. As a result, not one of those 74 pictures had any trouble with the censor.

Although local authorities in England sometimes complicate English censorship, the question of censoring films here is not so involved as in America.

First of all, there is the Organization of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, with Will Hays (popularly called the “Tsar of Hollywood) as its president. This organization was founded by the film people themselves for their own interests. Producers go to Will Hays for guidance when contemplating pictures dealing with subjects which might meet with some opposition.

Will Hays’ word is law. If he hears of a company making a picture which will be harmful to the Hollywood interests, he forbids it. Thus, an independent producer once conceived the idea of making a picture featuring all the girls in Hollywood who resembled Garbo. The whole thing was to be in the nature of a skit on this famous star. Will Hays heard about it, said “No”—and the film was never made.

Most American pictures seen in England bear a small sign at the bottom of the opening title. This reads: “Passed by the National Board of Review.”

This means that the film has received the approval of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures—a voluntary, citizen organization reviewing films in New York City with associate and advisory members, and affiliated citizen groups throughout the United States.
Film Censors

It was founded in 1909 by the People's Institution. It is opposed to legalized censorship, and in favour of the constructive method of placing emphasis upon and building patronage for the finer and more worthy films. Although it is not official, its decisions are regarded seriously by the film producers. Its review work is conducted by trained review groups chosen from a committee of over 250 members, representative of many professions and walks of life. Decisions are reached by majority ballot.

Next, there are the official censors. Every state has its own censor and state censorship varies to a bewildering degree. In one state, scenes showing women smoking are cut out; another state bans "horizontal" kisses, but permits them "vertically." Some states refuse to allow love scenes between white and black or yellow races; and in more than one state, drinking is severely frowned upon.

Canada has its own censors and here there is a definite pro-British atmosphere. This led to the classic Hell's Angels being rather amusingly cut. The Toronto censors insisted that the leading characters should change their nationality. Originally they were British; but when the film was shown in Canada they were American.

The reason was because a British airman was shown as a coward. The censors insisted that he should become an American, so all the leading characters had to become American. They became Americans rather abruptly. For a long time it was made to appear that they were English, going to an English school and living in England. Then suddenly a sub-title was flashed on the screen bearing the announcement that they were Americans and that a hectic party was typical American entertainment.

These sub-titles remained in the film when shown in England. But in Canada the censors went even further. They insisted on several dialogue changes, with the result that the characters' voices changed now and then during the picture.

American films are also "censored" by the Women's Freedom League, who send out to all their members circulars commenting on pictures. A film "rejected" by them is opposed all over the States and invariably has to be withdrawn.

Censorship, of course, varies the world over, according to local conditions. Thus Tell England was banned in Palestine, although it was shown in England and other parts of the Empire. The film had to be withdrawn from Palestine cinemas because it caused intense anti-British feeling among the Arabs.

This is an extreme case; but it is an example of the difficulties which face film censors in every country, every state, every city, and every town. Local conditions vary so much that there can be no standardized rules, and even in such a small place as England it becomes necessary for local authorities to have the last word in censoring films.
SECRETS OF SCREEN FASHION

The film as an arbiter of fashion is a new force in women's lives. Through its medium the newest ideas of Paris are transported to the ends of the earth in the shortest time. The stars of the screen serve as models for women all over the world. In this contribution Alice Williamson shows the relation of the screen fashions to every day. She advises the reader which players may safely be followed and which should be avoided. Than Alice Williamson no one is better qualified to write about women—or about films. Her novels are as famous as she herself is famous in Hollywood.

by Alice Williamson

"ARMS AND THE MAN" may be a good song; but "Dress and the Woman!" is better.

In fact, woman is armed if she is well dressed. If she is not well dressed, she is hardly a woman at all. To be well dressed needn't mean expensively dressed. It means suitably, expressively dressed. The right style of dressing can make a woman important in her own circle. The wrong style will leave her utterly unimportant. And she must not forget how bearing and carriage set off the right clothes.

This is really a serious question for every girl or woman, whether she can spend as much as she likes, or must study each shilling; for it is good taste, not money, that does the trick; good taste in dress, and in wearing a ten-guinea dress as if it had cost forty.

It is not the brainless woman who dresses well. It is the woman of intelligence; and so it is something to be proud, not ashamed of, if one is known to give thought to one's clothes.

I have seen many a rich woman with plenty to spend on her wardrobe who did not look half so well dressed as the girl who made her own frocks, or had to tell a "little dressmaker" exactly what she wanted.

I wonder if every girl realizes how worth while it is to make a man proud of showing her off when he takes her out? She can do this easily if she will study her own personality with coolness and courage, and make sure what is most becoming in line, colour, and design. She must be in the fashion; she must be distinctly chic; but what she must not do is to wear a thing entirely because it is the latest fashion.
The screen can and does serve as an admirable fashion guide for every woman. But it is a guide which must be followed with moderation and restraint. To copy it slavishly is as unwise as to ignore its obvious possibilities. It is my endeavour to show you the best use of the screen as a guide to fashion, beginning with this warning—take care.

Look at some of our blondes, for instance—many of them a little more blonde than Nature intended them to be. Because they have been to a film and seen Tallulah Bankhead with her high forehead uncovered on one side by the newest beret, they copy her. The result might be pleasing, and it might not. In some cases it gives an effect of complete baldness which is actually repulsive. They adopt a new and rather bewitching fashion regardless of whether it suits their own particular style.

As a rule, good taste in dress calls for quietness and the kind of simplicity which can be most expensive in the hands of a fashionable dressmaker. But there is a type of woman who may dazzle and almost strike you in the eye with bizarre originality of style, and be a stunning success.

Greta Garbo, for instance. She is tall, long-limbed, and oval-eyed. She has an almost leopard-like grace of her own, and yet the dresses, hats, and cloaks in which she looks best would be disastrous for other women to copy. She has two almost miraculous “doubles” in Hollywood. One is in society—not on the screen. The other, doubling professionally at times, can copy Greta’s extraordinary hair arrangements, quaint little caps or military-looking hats, neck ruffs and the rest, with success. I have never seen anyone who didn’t look like Greta Garbo, however, make a success of stealing her styles.

Lilyan Tashman is another of the Hollywood beauties who can wear the most amazing dance or dinner frocks and have everyone talking about them. She has generally invented them herself for herself, and she knows exactly what suits her best. Even her beach house at Malibu gives you the idea that it has been made to fit her. In it she is like a jewel in a box. Lilyan is one of the few blondes who may count red among her most becoming colours. Her Malibu beach house, inside and out, is entirely red and white; and when there, she never wears a frock for which the red and white isn’t a pleasing background.

Lilyan Tashman is now practically the queen of fashion at Hollywood and is so seldom seen in the same gown twice that when she is invited to a party, all the women are filled with curiosity as to what she may wear. But Lilyan is almost as difficult a person to copy in style as Greta Garbo. She is marvellous in a dress or hat which would practically kill anyone else.

The best rule is not to copy anyone slavishly. Choose your own style, realizing that what you wear can make or break you. “Know thyself” is a fine motto for a woman who wishes for social triumphs. She must be graceful, whatever her age and type may be. If she is over twenty-six or twenty-seven, she must have a youthful dignity. She must not, of all things, be “kittenish.”

The woman of average height and build should make an almost prayerful study of line. Even the sylph-like Hollywood stars as slender as Joan Crawford and Constance Bennett, study line, because it adds to the wand-like effect of their slightness. But line is still more important for a woman who is trying to get rid of a few pounds here and there; that is, the average woman.
The style of hairdressing is of paramount importance to the woman who means to make a success of herself. The wrong kind of hairdressing will completely ruin the most carefully thought out dress or hat. The platinum blonde hair, so much copied since Jean Harlow set the fashion, looks well in very few women. But the new "blue" hair can be exquisite. Billie Dove, one of the very greatest beauties among the stars, found lately that her thick brown hair was turning prematurely grey and, instead of dyeing or tinting, she has kept the grey effect, with a certain soft blueness, like a twilight shadow, lovely on the screen and off. Hollywood hair experts have been learning the art of giving a grey-blue tint to locks which are inclined to turn an ordinary and unattractive grey. Those who haven't seen the result can scarcely imagine the charm and bloom it lends to a pretty face.

If you are a young girl, dress like a young girl. If you are a woman, dress like a woman—unless you are a Mary Pickford, whom "young girl" styles are likely to suit for ever. As instances of young girls to copy, if you must copy, I should recommend Bette Davis, Mary Brian, and Sylvia Sidney. Among the girls who are particularly beautiful in sports frocks is Marion Davies. Her beach and house pyjamas, too, seem prettier than those of anyone else.

Marlene Dietrich—Nobody's Model.

Marlene Dietrich may not be copied by the average young woman, though she often wears the plainest things possible. She has learned style and realized the tremendous power in distinctive dressing, since arriving in Hollywood. She was a brilliant star in Germany where she won success by sheer talent and in spite of bad clothes; but she looks a different person to-day—and this is chiefly due to a careful study of dress. Any girl of intelligence can learn in the same way, and I think that a very great deal may be picked up from the screen—what to do and also what not to do. Almost all girls who have achieved stardom have achieved dress-knowledge for themselves at the same time, if they lacked it before. They can't, and don't, trust entirely to the expert studio designers, though they are generally ready to listen to advice.

Norma Shearer knew little of herself and her own very individual personality until, as the wife of Irving Thalberg, she became the talented star she is to-day.

Norma loves "line," now that she has learned its value. She is one of the most supple, one of the most delightfully "slinky" of all Hollywood actresses. She owes largely that fascinating "boneless" effect to her sense of line.

A "cheap" frock, ready-made, is seldom worth buying. But sometimes exquisite models can be found for low prices in a sale. One very smart, well-cut coat and skirt, with different blouses, several chic little hats, good gloves, and perfect shoes, can call more approving attention to a girl than a number of dresses where the accompanying details have not been carefully thought out. A pair of bad shoes, slightly soiled gloves, or a hat placed on the head at an unbecoming angle can spoil the most expensive costume.
I know a very fastidious young man who says that he could never love a girl if she had a crumpled handkerchief. "But," I asked him, "what if the poor dear had a cold in her head?"

"Well, then she ought to start out with plenty of fresh handkerchiefs," he argued sternly.

Also, he could never love a woman who wore a bandeau round her head! I thought, when the young man made this assertion, that he would change his mind if he could see lovely Constance Bennett in negligeé. Her Parisian tailor-mades are often quite severe, which gives them an added elegance. Small, fragile, yet exotic in her blonde beauty, "fussy" things would dim her radiance on the screen. But if this fastidious man could catch a glimpse of Connie in a white or blue negligeé, resting from work, with her golden hair fastened back by a pale blue band, he would be lost!

I think that Constance Bennett is perhaps the one and only blonde who doesn’t look banal in pale blue. She could never be a chocolate-box beauty, even if she dressed for the part.

If a girl is not well off, yet realizes the importance of dress, she will buy dark colours and not be tempted by a Connie Bennett baby-blue! If she has brown eyes and brown hair of a rich shade, she will look well in brown. Black in the evening seems equally becoming to blondes and brunettes. A fair girl, with pink cheeks and dark brows, is lovely by daylight in the right shade of grey. Purple, though beautiful, as pansies are beautiful, adds years to the age and had better be left to old ladies.

Tall girls with dignity of carriage may follow the lead of Kay Francis, who is one of the best-dressed young women in the world and knows as thoroughly as any what suits her. Ruth Chatterton knows also. She is an outstanding example of the woman who can make herself actually beautiful with the right clothes; above all, with the right arrangements of hair.

I have sometimes seen Ruth Chatterton come into the studio cafeteria to lunch, tanned deep brown, slightly freckled, her hair squashed anyhow under a sports hat and wondered how I had ever thought her worth looking at on the screen. Then, perhaps, I have seen her that same night at a dance or on the sound stage rehearsing for a picture, perfectly made-up, prefectly groomed, no detail exaggerated, yet not one forgotten in its harmony; and I have said to myself: "Ruth Chatterton is as attractive to look at as her charming voice is to hear." Hers, you know, was the first really good voice with which a woman spoke in a talking-picture.

She is a particularly safe person for the woman between twenty-five and thirty-five to follow, for she is so seemingly simple, so really sophisticated and what the French delight to call "bien soignée." This can be said of Gloria Swanson also, since her first and most important visit to Paris years ago. But Gloria can now no longer be associated with Hollywood only.

If you are lucky, you might meet her any day in Bond Street—when she isn’t at work! The hats and dresses which suit her in the daytime will suit almost any young woman who knows that she may practically make or mar her life by what she wears.
THE ART OF MAKE-UP

This article is contributed by Max Factor, whom Hollywood recognizes as the genius of make-up—both for the screen and private life. In collaboration with the motion picture world, he has brought make-up to its present state of perfection.

by MAX FACTOR

It is my privilege to tell you how and why I have developed my "colour harmony" system of make-up. My aim was to create cosmetics of life-like naturalness with which every woman in any part of the world could enhance her beauty and charm. I wanted to give to women the happiness and success that comes with a charming appearance. The past thirty years of my life have been devoted to this end. Thousands of women, including stars of the motion picture world, have come to me for advice. I have helped them satisfy their instinctive urge to be beautiful.

Let me take you back about ten years or so. We are on the set of one of the big studios. A large car quietly rolls up to the entrance, a famous star alights and hurries to her dressing-room, where I await her. For hours I have been working on something new, and of infinite importance and value to the science of make-up. To-night I am harmonizing colour pigment in cosmetics for the first time. I am making-up the star and explaining to her the results of my long years of careful investigation and experience. She wonders if the experiment will be a success.

We go out on the set under the dazzling lights. Her director is astonished at her radiant beauty. It seems she realizes my experiment is a success as the camera starts turning. The film is rushed into the projection-room. The scenes flash on the screen, and I realize, as the natural beauty of the star appears so lovely and so alluring, that the severe test I have imposed has proved the development of "colour harmony" in cosmetics.

From this time on, cosmetic "colour harmony" was applied to make-up for the woman in everyday life as well as on the screen. My everyday make-up is, of course, slightly different from the one used for the studios, but just as successful. To-day, powders, rouges and lipsticks are no longer selected in a haphazard fashion. My purpose—to give women all over the world a naturalness in beauty comparable to that of screen stars—has been fulfilled.

Make-up, to us in Hollywood, is the enhancement of natural beauty through the use of cosmetics, which are in perfect "colour harmony" with the individual complexion. It is applied so skilfully, artistically and delicately, that the final effect is one of exquisite beauty. The cosmetics used to gain this effect are blended into harmony of colour, so that they become a natural part of the skin and its loveliness. Even in the bright Californian sunlight at midday my make-up cannot be detected.

Long years of research and investigation gave me a classification of the human complexion and the features of the face. Finally, I charted seven types, as follows:

The Art of Make-up

Up to within a few years ago, make-up for the eyes was considered only suitable for the stage. Now the smartest women in the world add to the beauty of those "windows of the soul." Your eyes properly made up, will appear larger and more brilliant. They will increase the magnetism of your personality. You have often marvelled at the beautiful eyes of screen stars. Do as they do! It is simple.

The Eyes

Make-up for the eyes depends on three things: eye shadow applied to the upper lids, to give the eyes added depth and expression, and to harmonize the small area around the eyes with the rest of your make-up; mascara, to make the eyelashes heavier and longer and to accentuate the beauty of the eyes; and eyebrow pencil to give the eyebrows a more pronounced shape, to define slightly the outline of the eyes. All these, applied delicately and artistically, result in added attractiveness.

The purpose of make-up is to accentuate and enhance the tints already in your skin, while the object of it is to produce naturalness, so that the result will be as pleasing at a distance as from within a few feet. For, if you have applied make-up intelligently and artistically, the colours will be delicate and tender, giving you a clean fresh wholesome appearance. In other words, aim for a natural beauty.

I have myself made-up hundreds of "stars," and I have supervised the making-up of thousands of actresses as well as that of many society women. Every possible method has been used within my knowledge. I have always striven for the greatest enhancement of beauty. The method I give you now has been adopted as the best.

First: Cleanse the skin, removing every particle of make-up each night before retiring. Always have the skin absolutely clean before applying fresh make-up. Soap and water is the simplest method of cleaning, combined with good cleansing cream.

Before making-up for the day, close the pores and refresh the skin by patting with cold water and then a good astringent.

After this, apply a small amount of foundation cream to the forehead, cheeks, nose and chin. Please understand that the less you use, the better the final effect. Dip your finger-tips into cold water and gently blend the foundation cream into the skin, until it disappears from the surface. Work away from the centre of the face towards the side, using a one-way stroke.

Your face is now ready for the eye shadow. Apply it very faintly on the upper eyelids, just below the eyebrows, and blend it in. Use great care lest it be too noticeable and its effect theatrical.

Pat rouge lightly on the highest spot of your cheek, just below the cheekbone. Blend it gently into the skin with the finger-tips, shading the colour downwards to the full part of the cheek, keeping the colour away from the nose. Blend it until there is no definite line of colour to be seen. Remember that your object is to shade it so that the warm bloom looks as if it had actually grown on your cheeks.

Apply the face powder profusely with a powder puff, covering all your face. Then take a small, soft face powder-brush and brush off the surplus powder. (Never rub powder on.) In this way you will have an even surface of powder that will last for hours.

Then shape the eyebrows, fill them in, or give them a more pronounced colour and sheen with an eyebrow pencil. Where the eyelashes meet the lid, draw a fine line to define the eyes and accentuate their size.

Now apply mascara to the upper lashes by brushing upwards, then to the lower lashes by brushing downwards. Moisten the brush very slightly to prevent smearing.

Again let me emphasize the extreme importance of applying make-up delicately, for this is the secret of obtaining the natural result that is admired and desirable.

Your lips now require attention. Use lipstick sparingly. Dry the lips first and apply the lipstick evenly. Keep it well towards the inside of your mouth and avoid a rouge line where the lips meet. Then moisten the lips.

Finally, use a liquid blender on the untouched skin of your neck, so as to finish off in the same shade as your face powder. Smooth it on gently and evenly, using a downward one-way stroke and work it into the skin until dry.

Afterwards, to add lustrous sheen to your hair, sprinkle a little brilliantine as a final touch.

Experience has shown us that under artificial lights your natural day-time make-up is toned down. I recommend, therefore, a more enlivening colour harmony for evening make-up.

As counsel for many screen and stage celebrities and society beauties of Europe and this country, the difficulties of cleansing the skin thoroughly have been presented to me. A cleansing cream of highly refined materials and oils is absolutely essential.

If the skin is inclined to be oily, always use a good astringent before applying make-up. This neutralizes excessive oil sufficiently to give you a base for perfect make-up.

Many skins have a tendency to become too dry at times. This is a handicap in make-up and also leads to premature wrinkles. As a corrective, use a skin and tissue cream. This is readily absorbed. It supplies the oil which the skin lacks and restores a normal, soft, smooth texture. Tissue cream should be applied at night. Never massage the cream into the skin. Just pat it gently and smartly with the finger-tips. If used regularly your skin acquires almost a rose-petal softness.

One last word. I do believe that a healthy skin, blooming with radiant vitality, is the barometer of a healthy body. Correct eating, exercise, and rest are essential to a good complexion and a radiant appearance. These are the surest foundations upon which to enhance beauty by make-up.
OVER 1000 FILM BIOGRAPHIES
HOW TO USE THE BIOGRAPHICAL SECTION

The biographies of over 1,000 Film Players, Directors, and others, are planned as follows:—

They are arranged in three paragraphs. The first is a summary of all the descriptive particulars available about each personality set out in the following order: Real name; place of birth; date of birth; parents; colouring; height; weight; education; marriages; children; death.

This is followed by a brief survey of the personality's career which forms the second paragraph. Dates, where given in relation to film appearances, relate to production and not release, which is often a year later.

The third paragraph contains as complete a list as is available of the films in which each personality has appeared. The titles are accompanied by the name of the producing company (or, where that is not available, the releasing company).

Abbreviations

The following is a list of the abbreviations used in the first paragraphs:—

B  ..  ..  ..  ..  ..  Born
P  ..  ..  ..  ..  ..  Parents
Ht ..  ..  ..  ..  ..  Height
Wt ..  ..  ..  ..  ..  Weight
Ed ..  ..  ..  ..  ..  Educated
M  ..  ..  ..  ..  ..  Married
Div ..  ..  ..  ..  ..  A divorce has taken place
Dau ..  ..  ..  ..  ..  Daughter
D  ..  ..  ..  ..  ..  Died

In the lists of films the producing companies are given variously in abbreviated or full form. A complete list of these, with particulars of their activities and countries is given at the end of the book. (See page 485.)
ADAIR, Janice. Real name Beatrice Duffy. B. Morpeth, Northumberland. Brown hair, grey eyes. Ht. 5 ft. 3 in. Janice Adair is one of the few leading ladies of the screen to reach stardom without stage experience or a transitional period in crowds. Her first film was a Parkinson two-reeler, Streets of London.

Also Played in: Red Aces (B.L.), The Informer (B.I.P.), Alf’s Carpet (B.I.P.), Such is the Law (Stoll), Contraband Love (Para), Lloyd of the C.I.D. (Univ), Silver Greyhound (W.B.-F.N.).

ADOREE, Renee. Real name, Renee de la Fonte. B. Lille, France, 1902. Brown hair, blue eyes. Ht. 5 ft. 1 in. Wt. 7 st. 7 lb. Ed. while on the road with professional parents. M. (1) Tom Moore; div. 1925; (2) Sherman Gill, 1925.

Began her career at the age of ten as a dancer in her father’s troupe and visited most European cities with him. Went to America after the war and soon became famous by her performance in The Big Parade (M.G.M., 1925) opposite John Gilbert. Illness overtook her in 1930 and compelled her to abandon films for a period of two years.

Also Played in: Monte Cristo (Fox), Made in Heaven (Goldwyn), La Boheme (M.G.M.), Mr. Wu (M.G.M.), Forbidden Hours (M.G.M.), The Cossacks (M.G.M.), The Pagan (M.G.M.), Tide of Empire (M.G.M.), The Spoiler (Pathé), Redemption (M.G.M.), The Singer of Seville (M.G.M.), Call of the Flesh (M.G.M.).

AHNERE, Patrick. B. Ireland, 1901. Brown hair, dark eyes.

Had a very varied career before becoming a film actor. Among his numerous jobs were those of dishwasher in a Chinese restaurant, commercial traveller for sewing-machines, and sparring partner to Jack Hood, at that time British welter-weight champion. Is himself a possessor of many valuable boxing trophies. Stage debut in modern version of Hamlet, later achieving fame by his performance in White Cargo. Screen debut with Betty Balfour in Blinkeyes (Welsh-Pearson).

Also Played in: Binde (Wilcox), A Daughter in Revolt (Nettlefold), Silver Linings (B.I.P), Hunting-tower (Welsh-Pearson), Auld Lang Syne (Welsh-Pearson), Virginia’s Husband (Nettlefold), Carry On (Britainia), City of Play (Gains), The Game Chicken (Para-Brit), Come Into My Parlour (Eric Hakim).

Began his career as a bank accountant in Sheffield, but, meeting George Alexander, was fascinated with the idea of going on the stage. This he ultimately did with F. R. Benson’s company in Macbeth. London stage debut at the Lyceum, Feb. 15, 1900. Was starred in many British silent films, including Sally Bishop (Stoll). Talkie debut in The First Mrs. Fraser (Sterling, 1932).

AKED, Muriel. B. Bingley, Yorks. Brown hair, dark grey eyes. Ht. 5 ft. 4 in.

TALLULAH BANKHEAD
Nils Asther, who achieved a great personal triumph in Sorrell and Son (U.A.), was rapidly making for screen fame when talkies arrived. Having a decided Swedish accent, this, for a time, delayed the brilliant promise of his career. He refused, however, to be defeated. Studied English assiduously for months and finally convinced M.G.M. by his performance in Letty Lynnon that he deserved to be ranked with their finest performers. Nils was persuaded by Mauritz Stiller, discoverer of Greta Garbo, to enter pictures, his first film being made in Germany. Went to America in 1927 to play in Topsy and Eva (U.A.).

Also Played In: When Fleet Meets Fleet (StarK International), Laugh, Clown, Laugh (M.G.M.), The Cossacks (M.G.M.), Our Dancing Daughters (M.G.M.), Card-board Lover (M.G.M.), Dream of Love (M.G.M.), Single Standard (M.G.M.), Wild Orchids (M.G.M.), The Sea Bat (M.G.M.), But the Flesh is Weak (M.G.M.), Mad Masquerade (M.G.M.), Bitter Tea of General Yen (Col.).

During his early days as a sailor, George Bancroft staged plays on board, where he received so much encouragement that eventually, on giving up the sea, he started on a theatrical career as a black-faced song and dance comedian. Was later claimed by drama for which he showed great aptitude. His very first picture Driven attracted the attention of James Cruze who was so impressed by his talent that he cast him in The Pony Express (Para, 1925). This eventually led to a long contract with Paramount.

Also Played In: The Code of the West (Para), The Show Down (Para), The Drag Net (Para), Dock of New York (Para), The Wolf of Wall Street (Para), The Mighty (Para), Thunderbolt (Para), Ladies Love Brutes (Para), Derelict (Para), Scandal Sheet (Para), Paramount on Parade (Para), Rich Man's Folly (Para), Sons of the Sea (Para), Paying the Penalty (Para), The World and the Flesh (Para), Lady and Gent (Para), The Enchanted Hill (Para), Sea Horses (Para), The Runaway (Para), The Trumpet Call (Para).

Made her stage debut at the age of 16. A year later played Rose de Brissac in Foot Loos at the old Greenwich Village Theatre. Made her first appearance in London at Wyndham’s Theatre in 1923. While in London appeared in two British films A Woman’s Law and His House in Order (Gau-Brit). Was signed on a long-term contract by Paramount in 1931.

Also Played In: Tarnished Lady (Para), My Sin (Para), Thunder Below (Para), The Devil and the Deep (Para), The Cheat (Para), Tinfoil (M.G.M.).

Made his first stage appearance at Brechin in The Merchant of Venice, 1911. Served with the Essex Regiment during the war, and after the Armistice reappeared in London at the Lyric, Hammersmith. Went to America in 1924, appearing in New York for the first time as Captain Hook in Peter Pan.

Played In: Most Dangerous Game (Radio).

BARING, Norah. B. Devon, 1907. Dark hair, dark eyes. Married; 1 child. First became known for her work on the stage, one of her earliest parts being in A Kiss for Cinderella, the play by Sir James Barrie.

Although she was later to achieve prominence in British film productions it was in Germany that she made her screen debut, with a part in Parisiennes.

Also Played In: The Celestial City (B.I.F.), Shooting Stars (B.I.F.), Underground (B.I.F.), At the Villa Rose (Twickenham), A Cottage on Dartmoor (B.I.F.), Two Worlds (B.I.P.), Murder (B.I.P.), Lyons Mail (Twickenham), Should a Doctor Tell? (B.L.).

After an eventful career, during which she worked variously as kennelmaid, milk-maid, nurse, chorus girl, and dance hostess, she made her stage debut in Charlotte’s 1928 Revue. Screen debut with Gainsborough in 1929, in three shorts. It was not until 1931 that she had her first prominent part in Night in Moutmartre (Gains). Has continued her work on the stage, despite the tremendous amount of time she has to devote to the studios. Left for America at the conclusion of Cavalcade, in which she sang the “Twentieth Century Blues.”

Also Played In: Murder at Covent Garden (Twickenham), Innocents of Chicago (B.I.P.), Dr. Joxrer, K.C. (B.I.P.), Out of the Blue (B.I.P.), Strip Strip Hooray (B.I.P.), Love Lies (B.I.P.), Partners, Please (P.D.C.), Old Spanish Customers (B.I.P.), The Last Coupon (B.I.P.).

BARNETT, Vincent. B. Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, July 4, 1903. Brown hair, blue eyes. Ht. 5 ft. 6 in. Wt. 111 st. 6 lb. Ed. Duquesne University, Pittsburgh; Carnegie Technical College. Following a brief experience on the vaudeville stage, made his screen debut in Her Man (Pathé, 1930). Was for many years Hollywood’s only professional in-suit, his job being to pick on someone indicated by the host at a party and to pester the unsuspecting victim with insults throughout the whole evening. Sometimes he would masquerade as a waiter and, while serving, would drop soup down peoples’ necks. Has now abandoned this job entirely for the screen.

Also Played In: For the Love of Lil (Col), All Quiet on the Western Front (Univ), Wide Open (Warner), One Heavenly Night (U.A.), Unfit to Print (Para), A Royal Flush (Pathé), Scarface (U.A.), Night Mayor (Col), Tiger Shark (Warner), The New Yorker (U.A.), Heritage of the Desert (Para), Pride of the Legion (Tec-Art).

Also Played In: Tropic Madness (Radio), Ned McCobb’s Daughter (Pathé), Strange Cargo (Pathe), The Last of Mrs. Cheyney (M.G.M.), Road to Paradise (F.N.), Peacock Alley (Tiffany), Fat Wives for Thin (Mack Sennett), Woman to Woman (Tiffany), Women Who Play (Para-Brit), The Happy Ending (Gau-Brit), Return of Raffles (Nettlefold), After Dark (Fox-Brit).

BARRIE, Phyllis. M. Albert Nord. Mother was wardrobe mistress at Haymarket and Pavilion Theatres, London.

This interesting newcomer to the screen shared with Dorothy Hale one of the two leading feminine roles in I Have Been Faithful (U.A.), with Ronald Colman as its star.

Was trained as a dancer in London. Left England six years ago for Australia. In Sydney played the leading roles in many American musical comedies, among them No, No, Nanette, Lady Be Good, and Rio Rita. Four years later migrated to America, touring the West Coast under the name of Phyllis du Barrie. Was discovered by Sam Goldwyn who gave her a part in I Have Been Faithful, which is the film version of Cynara.

BARRIE, Wendy. B. Hong Kong, April 18, 1912. Fair hair, green eyes. Ht. 5 ft. 5 in. Ed. in Switzerland.

After leaving school, came to England. Was chosen by Alexander Korda for her first important part in Wedding Rehearsal (London Film Pro, 1932). Was signed up in 1932 on a long-term contract with London Film Productions, Ltd.

Played In: Collision (U.A. Brit), Threads (U.A. Brit), Call Box Mystery (U.A. Brit), Barton Mystery (Para Brit), Where Is This Lady? (Amalgamated Films Association).

BARRY, Joan. B. Nov. 5, 1903. Blonde hair, blue eyes.

First became known to the English public by her performance in No, No, Nanette, in March, 1925. This was five years after her first appearance on the stage in His Lady Friends. One of her earliest films was The Happy Ending (Gau, 1925).

BARRYMORE, John. Real name Blythe. B. Philadelphia, Feb. 15, 1882. Brown hair, blue eyes. Ht. 5 ft. 8 in. M. Dolores Costello, 1928. For a time deviated from the family tradition by serving as a cartoonist on a New York newspaper, but in 1903 decided to follow in his parents' footsteps and began his stage career by playing in Mogda. In 1926 came to London to play the name part in Hamlet. Film debut: Are You a Mason? (Para, 1915).

Regarded by many as the screen's finest character-actor, Lionel Barrymore started his stage career by playing with his parents when quite an infant. It is said that D. W. Griffith persuaded him to try a screen career in 1909 and gave him a part in Friends; but he went back to the stage for some years. Took up film acting in 1915, exactly 22 years after his first stage experience, one of his earliest films being The Yellow System (Met. 1915).

Beginning as an extra in serials, he soon attracted the attention of D. W. Griffith, who gave him his first big chance in Broken Blossoms (1919). This was followed soon after by a starring role in Tol'able David (Inspiration 1921). Film debut War Brides (Selznick, 1916).

BARTLAM, Dorothy. B. Yorkshire. Nov. 8, 1908, Dark hair and eyes. Ht. 5 ft. 2 in.

As talented a novelist as she is an actress, Dorothy Bartlam has two books to her credit—Contrary-Wise and Green Jennifer. Was originally intended to be a dancer and in 1923 joined a troupe on tour. Is a good example of the star who has had to battle her way through the crowds to success. First starring part in The Flying Squad (B.L., 1932).

First stage appearance in The Octofoon, in which he played the part of a dumb negro. A season with Edward Terry at Terry's Theatre, 1898, followed this, and subsequently he toured the country with Henry Neville. First screen appearance in A Safe Proposition (Fox-Brit, 1932).

Also Played in: Bed and Breakfast (Gau), Down River (Gau.), Flat Number 9 (Twickenham), Two White Arms (Eric Hakim).

Was "premiere danseuse" of the Ziegfeld Follies at the age of sixteen; her screen debut, however, had occurred before this, at the age of nine, when she played child parts for Universal. In 1927 abandoned the stage and returned to films to play in Ranger of the North (F.B.O.). A Paramount contract followed this. In July, 1932, was found in her apartment suffering from the effects of poison.

Also Played in: The Noose (F.N.), Serenade (Para), The Goddess Girl (Pathé), Celebrity (Pathé), Show Folks (Pathé), The Younger Generation (Col), Come Across (Univ), The Dude Wrangler (W.W.), Mounted Fury (W.W.), Hard Hombre (Allied), Arizona Terror (Tiffany), Arm of the Law (Mono), Phantom Express (Tec-Art), Hello Trouble (Col), Dream Mother, (Chesterfield), Pleasure (Suprem.).

BATTEN, John. B. Rotorua, N.Z. Brown hair, brown eyes. Ht. 5 ft. 10 in. Wt. 10 st. 5 lb. Ed. King's College, Auckland, N.Z.

Popular on the London stage, on which she made her debut when fifteen years of age. Has featured in a number of British films, one of the earliest being Bedrock (Piccadilly, 1930).

Also Played in: Bed and Breakfast (Gau), Down River (Gau.), Flat Number 9 (Twickenham), Two White Arms (Eric Hakim).

BAXTER, Warner. B. Columbus, Ohio, March 29, 1892. Dark hair and eyes. Ht. 5 ft. 10½ in. Wt. 10 st. 10 lb. Ed. Columbus, Ohio. M. Winifred Blyson.

Like many other young men with theatrical ambitions, Warner Baxter was for a time baulked by parental disapproval. At nine years of age he began to show a marked interest in the stage but his mother—a widow—persistently refused to hear of any attempt on the young man's part to go into the theatre. Tenacity, however, eventually won him his desire and he got his first opportunity with Dorothy Shoemaker, in Louisville, Kentucky. This obviously did not turn out too successfully, because he is recorded as having been partner in an Oklahoma garage some time after his first venture on the stage. Made his film debut in 1922. The Runaway (Para) and Aloma of the South Seas (Para) are among his early films.

Also Played in: Those Who Dance (F.N.), Christine of the Hungry Heart (F.N.), The Golden Bed (Para), A Son of His Father (Para), The Air Mail (Para), Happy Days (Fox), Mannquin (Para), Great Gatsby (Para), Miss Brewer's Millions (Para), Misnates (F.N.), The Telephone Girl (Para), The Coward (Radio), Drums of the Desert (Para), Singed (Fox), Woman's Way (Col), Tragedy of Youth (Tiffany), Ramona (U.A.), Craig's Wife (Pathé), Danger Street (Radio), West of Zanzibar (M.G.M.), Three Sinners (Para), In Old Arizona (Fox), Linda (Richmout), Far Call (Fox), Thru Different Eyes (Fox), Behind That Curtain (Fox), Romance of the Rio Grande (Fox), Arizona Kid (Fox), Such Men Are Dangerous (Fox), Renegades (Fox), Their Mad Moment (Fox), Doctor's Wives (Fox), The Squaw Man (M.G.M.), Daddy Long Legs (Fox), The Cisco Kid (Fox), Surrender (Fox), The White Man (M.G.M.), Amateur Daddy (Fox), Man About Town (Fox), Six Hours to Live (Fox).

(1) Chester Moorehead, with whom she eloped June 6, 1921; annulled 1923; (2) Philip Plant, Nov. 3, 1924; div. Dec. 15, 1929. (3) Marquis de la Falaise et Coudray, Nov. 22, 1931. Has one adopted son, Dickie Plant, a Londoner whose parents died as the result of a car accident.

Eldest daughter of the international stage star, Richard Bennett, she undoubtedly owes her sensational success to the talkies which make the most of her attractively husky voice. It was a meeting with Samuel Goldwyn at an Actors’ Equity Ball, in New York, that led to her appearance for the first time in a film. She is said to have earned with Warner Brothers the record salary of $6,000 a week and to have accumulated in the course of a year no less than $90,000. Her first film was Cyntharea (Goldwyn), 1920.

GREEN, HARRY. B. New York City,
April 1, 1892. Black hair, blue eyes.
Ht. 5 ft. 7½ in. Wt. 12 st. 6 lb. Ed.
New York University.

Toured England, South Africa and Australia, following many successful stage appearances in New York. Going to Hollywood from S. Africa for a holiday was signed up by Paramount, for whom he appeared soon after in Why Bring That Up? (1929).

At the age of six was already being billed all over the United States as a clever child mimic. Two years later Paramount secured her on contract. Film debut, Marriage Playground (1929).

Pic Pro), The Happy Ending (Gau-Brit), The Nipper (Betty Balfour Pictures, Ltd.), The Man at Six (B.I.P.), No. 17 (B.I.P.), The Faithful Heart (Gains), The Calendar (B.L.), The Squeaker (B.L.), Lily Christine (Para-Brit), The Old Man (B.L.), Murder at Covent Garden (Twickenham), Leap Year (Plays, Ltd.), Arms and the Man (B.I.P.), The Barney Stone (B. & D.), Priscilla the Rake (Sound City).

GREVILLE, Vanda. B. 1908. Red hair, blue eyes. M. Edmund Greville. Owing to the fluency with which she speaks English, French, German and Spanish, is very much in demand for films made in more than one language. After playing in crowds and small parts in Britain, was discovered by a French producer in a Paris restaurant and given a prominent part in The End of the World, which took over twelve months to produce. It was René Clair's film, Le Million, however, which brought her to her present popularity.

Also played in: Gentleman of Paris (Gau-Brit), Potiphar's Wife (B.I.P.), Le Bal, Suicide Train, Ebb Tide (Para-Brit), Le Million (Tobis).

GREY, Shirley. B. Connecticut. Finding life dull in a country parsonage she decided on a stage career. Was playing in an Oakland, Cal., stock company when she heard that Goldwyn was making tests for new players. Being unable to miss her evening performance, she hired a plane which enabled her to make a test in Hollywood and to return for her 8.30 cue. Probably owes her present success to this sort of enterprise.

ALSO PLAYED IN: Eugene Aram (Davidson), The Sleeping Cardinal (Twickenham), The Message (Gau-Brit), The Missing Rembrandt (Twickenham), Condemned to Death (Twickenham), Gentleman of Paris (Gau-Brit), Sign of Four (A.R.P.).

On her return from Paris took up commercial art, such as dress designing for department stores, advertising and designing wallpapers and textiles. Was given a screen test in New York by Paramount—and forgot it. Three days later she received a wire (but from M.G.M. this time), telling her to be on the set at Hollywood within three days, to play the part of a bogus duchess. Because she spoke her lines with perfect English and French accents, Hollywood thought her "high-hat," and refused to employ her for a long time. At last Paramount gave her a second chance, when she was almost starving. This was in Working Girls (1931).

Started life as a jockey, but a broken leg put an end to his turf career. Turned to the stage, and after fifteen years' experience, travelling in musical comedy all over the States, received an offer to play his original stage part in Rio Rita (Radio, 1929) on the screen, together with his partner, Bert Wheeler.

After a short stage experience turned to films to play in Hal Roach comedies, afterwards becoming a Western leading-lady for Universal. Was chosen by Erich von Stroheim to play a leading role in The Wedding March (Para, 1928).

WRIGHT, HUGH E. B. Cannes, France, April 13, 1879. Ed. Switzerland; Bournemouth.

Made her theatrical debut in America, 1928, before coming to England to play in Her First Affair, on the stage. Screen debut in Leave it to Me (G. King 1930).

At the age of 14 she organized a dramatic group at her school, producing their performances herself. A year later obtained her first part in London. Later toured the provinces and became a member of the Liverpool Repertory Company. Her great opportunity came as lead in the London production of The Devil. Went to America to play the same part. Went to Hollywood to make Rasputin (M.G.M., 1932). Chosen to play the lead in Cavalcade (Fox) in an all-British Star Cast, 1932.

YARDE, MARGARET. B. Dartmouth, Apr. 2, 1878. Ed. privately.

Made her first professional appearance on the stage at Manchester, 1934, in the chorus of The Duchess of Dantzig. London debut in Mrs. Ellison's Answer 1907, at the New Theatre. Also played in America before turning her attention to the screen.

YOUNG, Loretta. Real name, Gretchen Young. B. Salt Lake City, Jan. 13, 1913. Light brown hair, blue eyes. Ht. 5 ft. 5 in. Wt. 7 st. 11 lb. Ed. Ramona Convent, Alhambra, Cal.; by private tutor. M. Grant Withers; div.

Appeared with Fanny Ward in a film at the age of four, but her real screen career began accidentally some years later. A phone call came from the studio for her sister, Polly Ann, who was out of town. Loretta answered the call and played the role in Naughty but Nice (F.N., 1927). Was selected a Wampas Baby Star for 1929, together with another sister, Sally Blane.

Began his career as a bank clerk. Then went into a stockbroker's office, simultaneously playing in amateur theatricals, which, he confesses, earned much more of his attention than the work on which he was engaged. One evening was asked to remain late at the office, but chose, in preference, to attend the evening performance of his play. This lack of zeal earned for him an immediate dismissal and eventually the opportunity of becoming a film actor.

One of the most famous of all Hollywood’s directors, and especially noted for the lavish scale on which some of his greatest productions have been made. Until 1913, he was on the stage, and had succeeded equally as actor, playwright, and manager. In 1913, he joined another great picture pioneer, Jesse L. Lasky, and together they formed the company which became known all over the world as Famous-Lasky and which later developed into the Paramount Company. His first film was The Squaw Man (Lasky, 1913), recently re-made as a talkie under the title of The White Man (M.G.M., 1931). It was incidentally the first film to be made actually at Hollywood. In all he has made over sixty films, of which the most important are given below. Lately he has made one or two films for M.G.M.

An elder brother of the better known Cecil de Mille, William also spent his early life on the stage, following Cecil into motion pictures in 1914. During his career he has worked as producer and director for Paramount, Pathé and M.G.M.

DIRECTED: Conrad In Quest of His Youth (Para), Tenth Avenue (Pathé), Craig’s Wife (Pathé), The Doctor’s Secret (Para), The Idle Rich (M.G.M.), This Mad World (M.G.M.), Passion Flower (M.G.M.), Two Kinds of Women (Para).

DIETERLE, WILLIAM. B. Germany. M. Charlotte Hagenbruch, 1921.

Went to Hollywood in the first place to act in and direct German version films for First National. He had made Der Tausch Der Werter, Sinflut and Kismet before Hollywood recognized that he had real directional genius. Entered motion pictures in 1921, his first film being directed by E. A. Dupont. Since 1926, he has directed all the pictures in which he has appeared.

DIRECTED AND PLAYED IN: Those Who Dance (Warner).

His career in motion pictures began as an actor with some of the very early companies, such as Kalem, Nestor, Lubin and Keystone. Since then he has had a long contract with First National, and is now with Universal.

GRIFFITH, DAVID WARK. B. La Grange, Kentucky. Ed. privately.

Known as one of the very greatest and most brilliant silent picture directors, David Griffith saw first motion pictures first in Chicago in 1907. He thought it rather stupid, but realized there was money in it. Already a stage actor he did not refuse the part offered to him in a one-reel film called The Eagle's Nest, for which he was paid five dollars a day. After a short film-acting experience he became an assistant director to Biograph, for whom he made his first film, The Adventures of Dollie (1908). He was the first director to make a picture of more than 1,000 feet, an enterprise which led to the break between him and the Biograph Company. Soon afterwards he made a four-reel picture, then of almost incredible length, called Judith of Bethulia. He is now a member of the board of United Artists Film Corporation Limited. His films, The Birth of a Nation (U.A., 1915) and Intolerance (U.A., 1916), will never be forgotten.

Also Directed: Broken Blossoms (U.A.), Way Down East (U.A.), Dream Street (U.A.), Heart of the World (Comstock), ERNST LUBITSCH with HERBERT MARSHALL and KAY FRANCIS on the set. Note the various lighting equipment in the background. They include “rifles,” “broads,” “spots” and “hupes.” (See “Dictionary of Film Terms.”)

LUBITSCH, ERNST. B. Berlin, Jan. 23, 1892. Black hair, brown eyes. Ht. 5 ft. 7 in. Wt. 10 st. 2 lb. Ed. for the stage under Professor Max Reinhardt. Was playing in a stage comedy as low comedian in 1913, when a Berlin company offered him a comic part in a one-reel film. Within a year he was devoting himself entirely to the film world and was already a director. Achieved world-wide reputation by his production immediately after the war of Gypsy Blood (F.N., 1921), starring Pola Negri. Went to Hollywood in 1922 and one of his first efforts was to direct Mary Pickford. He is regarded as the most skilled, artistically, of all directors at film headquarters and was one of the first directors to be specially noticed by the film public, yet he has often modestly disclaimed the praise that has been showered on him. There is no doubt, however, that his handling of Maurice Chevalier in The Love Parade (Para, 1929), made both their reputations secure in the film world.

Also Directed: Passion (F.N.), Deception (Para), The Loves of Pharaoh (Para), The Wild Cat, The Doll, Rosita (U.A.), Montmartre (Para), The Marriage Circle (Warner), Three Women (Warner), Forbidden Paradise (Para), The Oyster Princess, Kiss Me Again (Warner), Lady Windermere’s Fan (Warner), So This is Marriage (M.G.M.), The Student Prince (M.G.M.), The Patriot (Para), Eternal Love (U.A.), Monte Carlo (Para), The Smiling Lieutenant (Para), Playboy of Paris (Para), One Hour With You (Para), The Man I Killed (Para), The Honest Finder (Para).

VAN BUREN, A. H. B. New Jersey.
Ed. Connecticut schools.

After long association with the stage was given the responsibility of directing the film version of Aloma of the South Seas (Para, 1926). One of his outstanding successes was The Trial of Mary Dugan
(M.G.M., 1929). Is now under long-term contract to Universal.

Directed: Crime, Small Time, Little Spitfire, Fast Life (F.N.), Some Day,
Prince of Diamonds (Col).

VAN DYKE, W. S. B. San Diego, Cal.,

Following twenty-five years experience of the theatre, during which he had played in vaudeville, repertory and touring companies, he entered the motion picture business as director to Pathé. Was
D. W. Griffith's assistant for Intolerance (U.A., 1916). Has since worked for almost every well-known producing company in Hollywood. Will be remembered by this generation for his magnificent direction in the heart of Africa of Trader Horn (M.G.M., 1931). Is now under contract to M.G.M.

VIDOR, King Wallis. B. Galveston, Texas, Feb. 8, 1895. Black hair, blue eyes. Ht. 5 ft. 11 1/4 in. Wt. 13 st. 7 lb. Ed. private school at Galveston, San Antonio; Peacock Military Academy, Texas. M. Eleanor Boardman.

In the early days of motion pictures wrote a film story, sold it to a small company, acted the principal role, as well as directing it. Realized he knew little or nothing about motion pictures and decided to learn his business from the beginning. The positions of studio carpenter, property-man, and camera-man soon followed, and in time he again handled the director's megaphone. The Crowd (M.G.M., 1929) is one of his outstanding successes, but he earned world-wide fame for his handling of Street Scene (Col., 1932).

VON STERNBERG, Joseph. B. Vienna. Black hair, grey eyes. Ht. 5 ft. 5 in. Wt. 10 st. 5 lb. M. Riza Royce.

Was taken to America by his parents when seven years of age and, after completing his schooling, tried almost every known occupation in film production. Gained his first opportunity as director by directing The Salvation Hunters (U.A., 1923) on his own initiative. While he and G. K. Arthur, the leading man, were engaged on this, the greatest adventure of their lives, Hollywood was not a little amused, but when it was released, it had to be admitted by the most experienced that Sternberg had in him a touch of genius. Has often been acclaimed one of the ten most popular directors in America. In 1930 directed The Blue Angel for U.F.A. in Berlin. This was the film which made Marlene Dietrich a world-renowned star. Has directed this same star in every picture she has produced in America.

At one time an officer in the army of Franz Josef of Austria. Went to New York, where he worked alternately as dish-washer, ostler, gardener, newspaper man and magazine writer. Screen debut as the Pharisee in Griffith's Intolerance (U.A., 1916). Learnt his early cinema from Griffith. His first great achievement did not come until he directed and acted in Blind Husbands (Univ, 1919), the stage version of which he had previously written. He also assisted in the direction of various Pickford and Fairbanks pictures. One of his finest productions was Greed (M.G.M., 1923), in which he directed Zasu Pitts in her greatest role. Selected one of the best ten directors in 1926. Member of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

W

WALKER, NORMAN. B. Bolton, Lancs., 1892.
Made his theatrical debut in Manchester. joined up during the war and attained the rank of captain. Made his film debut in 1920 as assistant director, and continued this career till he became a name in the film world. Is now under contract to B.I.P. as one of their leading directors.

Directed: Tommy Atkins (B.I.P.), Wildecombe Fair (B.I.P.), The Spanish Dandy, Romance of Seville (F.N.), Melody of Fate, Hate Ship (B.I.P.), Loose Ends (B.I.P.), The Middle Watch (B.I.P.), Uneasy Virtue (B.I.P.), Mr. Bill the Conqueror (B.I.P.), Fires of Fate (B.I.P.), The Shadow Between (B.I.P.).

Intended becoming a surgeon, but Fate compelled him to leave school and obtain work. Began his motion picture career as an assistant cutter. Since then has worked in every branch of studio activity except as an actor. He confesses to an intense dislike of directing, and yet it is a recognized fact in Hollywood that he is one of the most commercially successful directors in America.

Directed: McFadden's Flats (F.N.), The Texas Steer (Univ), Man Must Fight (Para), The Shopworn Angel (Para), Innocents of Paris (Para), Anybody's War (Para), Seven Days' Leave (Para), Right to Love (Para), Man of the World (Para), Kick-in (Para), Road to Reno (Para), To-morrow and To-morrow (Para), Thunder Below (Para).

Following a two-years' tour of Europe after graduating from college, began studying play writing under the late Paul Armstrong. Was seen on the stage for a brief period after this and eventually became a motion picture actor in 1912 with the old Biograph Company. Was featured by D. W. Griffith in The Birth of a Nation (U.A., 1915). Has since directed over one hundred films. It is unlikely that he will be seen on the screen again as he was deprived of the sight of one eye by an unfortunate car accident in 1928.

Following brief stage experience made his motion picture debut with D. W. Griffith as a crowd player. His ability as a writer eventually brought him the opportunity of becoming a director. Came to England in 1931 to direct The Happy Ending for Gaumont-British.

Also Directed: The Sea Beast (Warner), Gentlemen of the Press (Para), Glorifying the American Girl (Para), Affairs of the Follies (F.N.), The Love Thrill (Univ), Golden Cocoon (Warner), Honeymoon Hate (Para), Naughty but Nice (F.N.), The Drop-Kick (F.N.), Honeyymoon Flats (Univ), Painted Angel (F.N.), Golden Calf (Fox).

Began his motion picture career as a juvenile with Douglas Fairbanks in the Knickerbocker Buckaroo (Artcraft, 1919). After this experiment at acting decided that he would not rest until the opportunity of becoming a director came his way. Accepted a position as property-boy with the Fox Company and worked his way to the position of assistant-director in less than four years. Was given his first directorial opportunity by B. P. Schulberg and, when the latter joined Paramount, he insisted that Wellman be taken, too.

Directed: The Cat's Pyjamas (Para), You Never Know Women (Para), Wings (Para), Legion of the Condemned (Para), Ladies of the Mob (Para), Beggars of Life (Para), Chinatown Nights (Para), The Man I Love (Para), Young Eagles (Para), Womans Trap (Para), Dangerous Paradise (Para), Steel Highway (Warner), Maybe it's Love (Warner), Night Nurse (Warner), Slave Witness (Warner), The Honourable Mr. Wong (F.N.), So Big (Warner), The Purchase Price (F.N.), Love is a Racket (F.N.), Enemies of the Public (Warner) Conquerors (Radio), 20,000 Years in Sing Sing (Warner), The Lost Lady (F.N.), Common Ground (Warner).

WEST, ROLAND. B. Cleveland, Ohio, 1887.
Began his career on the stage at the age of seventeen, and after a time formed his own touring company. Made his motion picture debut as a producer, working with Joseph Schenck. Left motion pictures after a time to produce Unknown Purple on the stage; rejoined Schenck two years later as assistant producer at United Artists.

DIRECTED: The Bat (U.A.), Alibi (U.A.), The Bat Whispers (Col), Corsair (Col).

Began his career as cartoonist in London. During the war was a subaltern in the 7th Worcester Infantry Regiment. Made his stage debut with the Birmingham Repertory Company when he played the role of Abraham Lincoln. Eventually became a stage producer and, after the success of the play Journey's End, was invited to Hollywood to direct the film version of that play (Tiffany, 1930). This was equally successful and he was made co-director of Hell's Angels (U.A., 1931).

DIRECTED: Waterloo Bridge (Univ), Frankenstein (Univ), Impatient Maiden (Univ), The Old Dark House (Univ).

WILCOX, HERBERT. Director and Producer. (See Biographies of Other Important Film Personalities.)

Was in the real estate business, but transferred his activities to a job as assistant director. Attracted the notice of Cecil B. De Mille, who promoted him to a directorship. Is now with M.G.M.

DIRECTED: The Gilded Cage (Brady-World), The Beloved Villain, Double Speed (Para), Excuse My Dust (Para), What's Your Hurry? Biographies of Other Important Film Personalities

This list of biographies deals with a number of other people highly placed in the film industry who have an important association with, and a powerful influence upon, its development.

Had devoted the best part of his early career to directing comedies and produced over a hundred of these before becoming production supervisor for Columbia in 1928. In August, 1931, assumed the position of production head at the Tiffany Studios. Was at one time head of Bischoff Inc., and Bischoff Productions.

BLATTNER, LUDWIG.

Managing Director, Ludwig Blattner Picture Corporation, Limited.

Is vice-president and production supervisor of Mayfair Pictures Corporation; also representative of Sono-Art World-Wide Pictures. Has had a long and varied career in the film industry, during which he was associated for many years with Mrs. Wallace Reid, the wife of a former Hollywood star. Together they produced several films, and in 1929 presented The Dude Wrangler, one of the first all-talking pictures.

CHAPLIN, CHARLES.

Is executive head of his own production company, allied to the United Artists Corporation. Is known for his acting rather than his direction but the fact that he has frequently been chosen as one of America's best ten directors proves that his acting does not claim all his talents. (See also Players' Biographies.)

A name associated by cinema-goers the world over with sparkling comedies. Has been connected with the film industry since 1909, when, during a rest from stage work, he was asked to produce David Horsley's Nestor Comedies at Bayonne, N.J. Now producing for Columbia.

After a long and eventful career has become part-owner with his brother of the Columbia company, and has demonstrated his genius for production with films like Ladies of Leisure, Submarine and Tol'able David.

Although he had drawn numerous cartoons for animated pictures before introducing Mickey Mouse to cinema-goers, it was this latter character that made him world famous. Mickey Mouse's first release occurred in America in May, 1928.
Is now producing Silly Symphony cartoons for United Artists, an engagement which began in March, 1932.

Began his association with the motion picture industry in 1915, with the old Paramount Company in New York. Later joined Fox in their New York exchange (1917). Was with Tiffany Productions Incorporated, 1926-1930, as special representative and in charge of the production of all shorts and all talking features produced by Tiffany in New York. Among the pictures which came under his supervision was Aloha. Is now president and general manager of Ambassador Pictures, Incorporated.

GOLDWYN, Sam. B. Warsaw, Poland, Aug. 22, 1884. M. (1) Blanche Lasky, sister of Jesse Lasky; dissolved 1915; (2) Frances Howard. One child.

Began his business career as a glove apprentice and such was his industry that later he was given an interest in the business. In 1910, with Jesse Lasky, he founded the Lasky Company, and three years later released the first picture which was to earn for his company a world-wide reputation. This was The Squaw Man, starring Dustin Farnum, and directed by Cecil B. de Mille. In 1917 Goldwyn was instrumental in bringing about the Famous Players Lasky merger and became that company’s first chairman. In 1918, with Arch and Edgar Selwyn, he formed Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, of which he became president; later he sold out his interest in this company to Metro’s and started again as an independent producer, a policy which he has pursued ever since. Is now associated with United Artists Corporation and has been responsible for the release of, among other films, Bulldog Drummond, Arrowsmith, Palmy Days and Whoopee. On October 13, 1927, he was unanimously elected Owner-member of United Artists by the others, who include Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charles Chaplin. Joseph M. Schenck and D. W. Griffith, is credited with having discovered Ronald Colman, Vilma Banky, Lois Moran, Gary Cooper and Walter Byron.

HAYS, Will H. B. Sullivan, Indiana, Nov. 5, 1879. Ed. Wabash College (B.A., 1900; M.A., 1904); Mount Union College (Doctor of Laws Degree).

At the age of 21 he was admitted to the Indiana Bar and later became a member of his father’s firm, Hay & Hay, during which time he served as City Attorney of Sullivan. During the war held various state appointments, ultimately becoming Postmaster-General on the election of President Harding. This post he later resigned to become America’s film dictator, at a salary of over $30,000, his actual title being President of the Motion Pictures Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. In this office he acts as censor, guide, philosopher and friend to the whole American film industry. Under his rule, many reforms have taken place in the industry. He was instrumental in the formation of Film Boards of Trade. Also introduced local Arbitration Courts in at least 32 centres in the United States. His announcement that he would not sanction the production of any more gangster films caused consternation throughout the film world in 1931. By his efforts, more than 200 books have been kept off the screen, and he secured the agreement of the Motion Picture Industry to a new code of ethics, according to which the sanctity of marriage was to be upheld and nudity forbidden. Under his leadership the industry has risen to much higher levels of artistic achievement than hitherto.

Began his motion picture career in 1926 but it was not until the release of the much discussed Hell’s Angels that cinemagoers in this country became familiar with his name. Is president and sole proprietor of the Houston Tool Company, and is reputed to be a millionaire. Other films which he has directed include Everybody’s Acting, Two Arabian Knights, The Rachet, The Mating Call and Front Page.

Is a pioneer of the motion picture industry and during the early days toured the Western States of America with films he had taken on his expeditions, often using acetylene gas for illumination. One of his first feature films was Cannibals of the South Seas, produced in 1912. Other films of the South Seas quickly followed, among them Captured by Cannibals, Head Hunters of Malekula and On the Borderland of Civilization. Has devoted practically the whole of his career to making expeditions for films in out-of-the-way parts of the globe. Among his more recent successes are Congorilla and Simba. His permanent address is Box 51, Nairobi, British East Africa.

Began his career as a reporter on the "Waterloo Daily Reporter," remaining there for several months before turning his attention to banking and real estate. Pursued these occupations for some time, until, at the age of twenty-two, he met Wilbert Shallenberger, who later organized the Arrow Film Corporation. Johnston was engaged as secretary, and was given charge of almost every studio and distribution activity. The position of treasurer followed this and soon after the presidency of Big Productions Film Corporation. His activities in connection with film production did not prevent him from "interest[ing] himself in several theatres. After a time, he rejoined Arrow Film Corporation and, soon after, was elected vice-president, a position which he held until 1924, when he organized and became president of Rayart Pictures Corporation.

KENT, Sidney R., President Fox Film Corporation.

LAEMMLE, Carl B. Lauphein, Germany, Jan. 17, 1867. Grey hair, blue eyes. Ht. 5 ft. 2 in. Wt. 10 st. Ed. Germany. M. Recha Stern.

Has had a very long and eventful career in America, working his way up to his present position from that of a bookkeeper in a New York drug store. It is said that he laid the foundation of his present position by the foresight he displayed in buying a cinema in Chicago, February 24, 1906. The purchase of other cinemas quickly followed. Released his first picture, Hiawatha, 989 feet in length, in April, 1909. Love's Stratagem, the second one, 054 feet long, followed soon after. In May, 1912, Laemmle, R. H. Cochrane, Charles Bauman, David Horsley, P. A. Powell and W. H. Swanson combined their interests and formed Universal Film Manufacturing Company, with offices at 1, Union Square, New York City. Later that year Laemmle visited Europe and opened his first independent foreign agency. Soon after he and Cochrane bought out P. A. Powell and obtained control of Universal, moving their offices in 1924.5 to their present quarters in Fifth Avenue and 57th Street. In 1926, was stricken with appendicitis on board the Berengaria; an operation followed immediately after in London. On the anniversary of his sixtieth birthday, he was honoured by a demonstration which included most of Hollywood's celebrities, among them Mary Pickford, who worked for him early in her career. His film All Quiet on the Western Front was awarded almost every known prize for films in America and in Europe, including the gold statuette of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, the "Film Daily" poll, the Gold Medal of the Faculty of Arts, London, and the Photoplay Magazine Gold Medal. Becoming a grandfather in 1930, his nickname was changed from "Uncle Carl" to "Granddaddy Carl." In February, 1931, on the occasion of his silver jubilee in the business, a bound volume of letters received from exhibitors was presented to him in Hollywood; and a biography by John Drinkwater was published in England by Heinemann.

Entered the motion picture business soon after graduating from college and by his early efforts prompted his father to assign to him in 1929 the position of general manager in complete charge of all Universal productions. Was responsible during the early part of his career for the Universal Junior Jewel series which produced the Collegian series, with George Lewis as the star. Among the films which later came under his supervision are King of Jazz, Dracula, Frankenstein, All Quiet on the Western Front and Waterloo Bridge.

LASKY, Jesse L. B. San Francisco, Calif. Ed. High School, San Francisco. Was one of the first men from the West Coast to join the gold rush to Alaska and one of the first hundred to reach Nome. Previously, however, he had been a reporter on a San Francisco newspaper. On his return from Alaska, finding nothing better to do, he became a musician and leader of the Royal Hawaiian Band of Honolulu. Later he presented a number of musical acts on the stage. In 1914 associated himself with Samuel Goldwyn and Cecil B. De Mille in organizing Jesse L. Lasky Feature Player Company and immediately began producing the then well-known Belasco dramas, among them Rose of the Rancho, Girl of the Golden West and Waverley of Virginia. Among the players who appeared for him in those early days were Blanche Sweet, House Peters, Ina Claire, Fanny Ward, Carlisle Blackwell and Geraldine Farrar. When, in July, 1916, Famous Players Film Company combined with Lasky Feature Player Company he was made vice-president of the new corporation and has continued in that capacity ever since. He has at all times remained in complete charge of the company’s production, dividing his attentions between the big Lasky Studio at Hollywood and the office in New York, where he is in close touch with the Long Island Studio activities.

MAXWELL, John.

Was at one time a solicitor practising in a small Scottish town. A sudden idea one day led him to the purchase of a theatre, and, discovering that the potentialities were great, he bought up other theatres, until in time he became the owner of a large group of first-class houses. From this it was only a step to an active interest in the renting side of his business. Soon he became associated with the Wardour Film Company, of which he is chairman to-day. Under Maxwell’s guidance this company grew into the leading independent house in this country. From this, he turned his attention to film production and in time acquired the Elstree studios of British National Pictures. At the same time he formed the now famous British International Pictures, Ltd., the distributing side of which is served by Wardour Films Ltd. Is undoubtedly one of the persons to whom great credit is due for promoting the motion picture industry in this country to its present position.

OSTRER, Isidore.

Eldest of the three famous Ostrer brothers. President, Denman Picture Houses, Ltd., Gaumont British Picture Corporation, Ltd., Provincial Cinematograph Theatres Ltd., etc., etc. Is associated with many of the film enterprises in this country and much of the progress that has been made with films over here recently is probably due to the financial genius exercised by him and his famous brothers. Everywhere in the film world one comes in contact with their name, but more particularly in the affairs of the Gaumont-British Picture Corporation, which contributes a large number of films to the British market every year. This company was founded 34 years ago by Colonel Bromhead and Leon Gaumont. In May, 1932, a book, “Conquering Gold,” by Isidore Ostrer, was published. This dealt with the difficulties and advantages of the gold standard, which, at that time, was the centre of interest in this country. The following month, June, marked the opening of the new Gaumont-British Studios at Lime Grove —the biggest production development British films had seen for some years.

OSTRER, Mark. B. about 1893. M. Florence Margaret Peterson.

One of the financially influential brothers whose entry into the film business has caused such a stir in the past few years. Is a director of 27 companies, among them Gaumont-British Picture Corporation, Ltd., Denman Picture Houses, Ltd., and Lothbury Investment Corporation, Ltd. Like his brothers, takes a vital interest in the motion picture industries of Britain and has contributed not a little to the enhanced reputation of British films during the past few years. Was associated with the production of Flames of Passion which marked the first occasion on which an American star was brought over to this country to appear in a British film. Also associated himself with Herbert Wilcox in the production of Chu Chin Chow, the first post-war Anglo-German film.

PABST, G. W. Producer and Director. (See Directors’ Biographies.)

his term of office was responsible for Vauudville (U.F.A., 1925), with Emil Jannings and Lya de Putti. Later went to Famous-Players-Lasky and M.G.M., in Hollywood, as production manager.
Returned to Europe and has been producing for U.F.A. since 1927.

ALSO PRODUCED: Waltz Dream
(U.F.A.), Faust (U.F.A.), Metropolis
(U.F.A.), Melody of Hearts (U.F.A.), Love Waltz (U.F.A.), Blue Angel (U.F.A.), Monte Carlo Madness (U.F.A.), Congress
Dances (U.F.A.).

Dec. 2, 1876. Dark grey hair, hazel eyes. Ht. 5 ft. 7 in. Wt. 9 st. 9 lb.
Ed. London elementary schools. M.
Amy Clara Minister.

Has never at any time during his career been associated with anything but entertainment. In 1895 toured Great Britain and France with Frank C. Bostock's circus and menagerie. In 1897 was advance manager for Lord George Sanger's circus. In 1900 he joined Fred Karno's company in vaudeville. Made his first appearance in the United States as manager and producer with the same company in 1905. In 1910, returned to England and after a brief stay reappeared in America with A Night in a London Secret Society, in which Charles Chaplin made his American debut. This, with other plays with Charles Chaplin, continued until Nov., 1913, when the latter went into motion pictures with the Keystone Company. In 1914 again returned to England on a theatrical tour, most of his time being occupied with entertaining wounded soldiers. In 1918, visited Hollywood and renewed his association with Charles Chaplin, who had just begun his own production studios.
Later became president of Chaplin's Studios Inc., and general manager and vice-president of Charles Chaplin Film Corporation, a position which he holds to this day.

ROACH, HAL. B. El mira. N.Y. Jan. 19, 1892. Married; 2 children.

When seventeen years of age was working in Alaska in the trucking business.
Motion picture career began with Universal as a cowboy at twenty-five dollars a week. During the course of his work met Harold Lloyd, and the two raised enough money to make a picture which later sold at a considerable profit. The next step was the acquisition of the Roach Studios, which began their activities at Glendale. Then they went to Santa Monica, where the famous Lonesome Luke Comedies were produced.

From Santa Monica they moved to their present quarters at Culver City, where a big plant was installed in 1919. Hal Roach productions are now released through M.G.M.

Unlike many Hollywood directors, he began his career in motion pictures as an apprentice camera-man, with the fixed idea of learning the whole business. Was promoted to camera-man and later to assistant-director, 1921. Received his first directorial opportunities with F.B.O.
(now Radio), broadening his experiences soon after with other companies. Now producing under his own name for Tiffany

SARNOFF, DAVID.
Chairman, R.C.A. Victor Company,
Inc., and president Radio Corporation of America. Director, R.K.O.,

SCHENCK, JOSEPH M. B. Russia, Dec.

In 1908 he began running amusements parks. He and his brother Nicholas still own the Palisades Park, New Jersey.
His first screen venture was to film a magazine story, starring Joe Collins, under Roland West's direction. In 1918 he produced Panthea, featuring Norma Talmadge and later became producer for Constance Talmadge, followed by Buster Keaton. In 1924 Schenck was elected chairman of United Artists Corporation, and in 1927 became president of the company.

SCHENCK, NICHOLAS M.

SCHULBERG, B. P. B. Bridgeport, Conn.
Jan. 19, 1892. Ed. High School, New York City; College of the City of New York.

Began his career as a reporter on the New York Evening Mail. His next position was associate-editor of the magazine, Film Reports, organized in the interests of Independent Producers and Exhibitors. In this capacity he was given the opportunity of making friendships that a year later enabled him to become actively interested in the motion picture industry, becoming at first publicity-director and scenario writer with Rex Pictures Corporation, New York City. A year later, when Adolf Zukor launched his Famous-Players Company, he was transferred to this firm (1912) and was mainly responsible for the release of the first feature length motion picture sold in America, Queen Elizabeth, with Sarah Bernhardt in the title role. One of the earliest films produced by his company was The Prisoner of Zenda. When Zukor's Famous-Players company combined with Jesse L. Lasky in 1915 to become the Paramount Corporation, Schulberg retained his post and it was not until several years later that he decided to try his hand at independent production. Is credited with having discovered Clara Bow and to have given her her first opportunity.

Was trained from early childhood to become an executive in the motion picture business. Was at one time associate producer at M.G.M. and then joined Paramount as executive assistant to B. P. Schulberg, who was then general manager of West Coast productions for Paramount.

SENNETT, MACK. B. Denville, Quebec, 1884.

Began his career on the stage, in dancing roles in a touring company. First screen appearance was with the old Biograph Company, under D. W. Griffith. With two others he formed the Keystone Company, 1912, one of his first discoveries being Charlie Chaplin, whom he trained into the quaint little figure that will always be remembered as "Charlie"—in spite of his graduation to "Mr. Chaplin." Mabel Normand, Ford Sterling, Gloria Swanson and Harry Langdon are among those who owe their early training to Mack Sennett. His studio has been christened "The Sennett School of Film Acting," so numerous are the successful stars who started with Uncle Mack. With the gradual disappearance of "custard-pie" comedy, Sennett faded into the obscurity of a provider of rather insignificant shorties. But, with the coming of sound pictures, he re-established himself as a maker of films. His one effort at deeper crafts- manship was Susanna (1923), with Mabel Normand, but it is for his slapstick humour that he is best known.

Also Produced: Good-bye Kiss, Midnight Daddies, The Lion's Roar, Hollywood Theme Song, Dance-Hall Marge.

SHORTT, Rt. Hon. EDWARD, K.C. B. Mar. 10, 1862. Ed. Durham School and University. M. Isabella Stewart, 1890; Three daughters. President, British Board of Film Censors since 1929. Recorder of Sunderland, 1907-18; M.P., W. Newcastle, 1910-22; Chief Secretary for Ireland, 1918-19; Home Secretary, 1919-22. Occupies in Britain the position which in America is held by Will Hays, and is the final censor of all films intended for exhibition in this country.

STARR, HERMAN. Vice-President, Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc.

Began his motion picture career with Universal as secretary, later becoming private secretary to Carl Laemmle, Senr., a position which he retained for two years before becoming general manager and director for the same company. Later joined Louis B. Mayer as production head and, when the latter became affiliated with Metro-Goldwyn, he was promoted to production manager for the new organization.

WARNER, ALBERT. Vice-President, Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and Director of First National Pictures, Inc. One of the famous Warner brothers. (See Jack Warner.)

WARNER, HARRY. President, Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and senior of the three brothers who formed this firm. (See Jack Warner.)

On completing his education joined his brothers, Harry and Albert, in a bicycle shop at Youngstown, Ohio. Being the youngest of the three, it was not unnatural that he should play the part of errand boy, clerk and general handyman. Later, the brothers turned their attention to the entertainment world and, with the purchase of their first theatre at Newcastle, Pa., their active interest in this direction began. Here young Warner was given the opportunity of utilizing his tenor voice and used to sing illustrated songs. When the Warner brothers began renting films he inspected the pictures that were being considered, and it was on his judgment that decisions were made. Ill-fortune came to the famous brothers in time, compelling them to separate, thus it was that Jack paid his first visit to Hollywood in search of a new career. Having learnt the essentials of the motion picture business, he began producing a series of Al St. John and Monty Banks comedies. After a time the brothers joined again and presented the world with My Four Years in Germany. It was due to Jack Warner's artistic and productive abilities that this film became a great success and laid the foundation of the Warner Brothers' present position in the motion picture industry. Having found that direction was his true vocation, he thereafter took an interest in all subsequent productions. Having established themselves, the Warner Brothers opened a studio on the West Coast of America, which was again mainly under the control of the youngest brother. He was later called to Hollywood to participate in the development of the Vitaphone Company which was inaugurated at the time when talkies were causing a revolution in the motion picture industry. It is due to his guidance that the interests of this company have been promoted to their present influential position in the motion picture world.

WEST, ROLAND. B. Cleveland, Ohio, 1887. M. Jewel Carmen.
The motion picture business had not even been remotely heard of when Roland West turned his attention to theatricals. He began as an actor and achieved a certain amount of success in this direction. Before he was to produce his first picture—Lost Souls, with Joseph Schenck—he was to be playwright, director and producer of stage plays. With Joseph Schenck he chose to make himself responsible for the creative side of the business rather than take an interest in finance. During those days he made many successful films, among them De Luxe Auntie, with Norma Talmadge. Left the motion-picture business for a period of two years to produce The Unknown Purple on the legitimate stage. On his return to Hollywood was offered the post of associate producer by United Artists. Among his more successful and recent productions are The Monster, The Bat, The Dove and Alibi.

After demobilization from the Army in 1919 began to take an active interest in the British motion picture industry. Was at first secretary and director of Astra films and is now a director and one of the most active personalities in British and Dominion Film Corporation Limited, which has its studios (one of the most up-to-date in Europe) at Elstree. One of his greatest productions, Good Night Vienna (B. & D.), starring Jack Buchanan, met with world-wide success. Other films directed by him include Chu Chin Chow, Nell Gwyn, Pompadour, Dawn, and Carnival (B. & D.).

WOOLFE, C. M.
Associated with the Ostrer Brothers in their film ventures First took an active interest in this country's motion picture industry in 1910, when, as a partner in W. & F. Film Service, Ltd., he was successful with his exploitation of Harold Lloyd comedies. Is one of the men to whom great credit is due for the progress made by British films since the War. Is now deputy chairman and joint managing director of Gaumont-British Picture Corporation, Ltd., and managing director of W. & F. Film Service, Ltd.

During his career has been associate executive in charge of Warner Bros. pictures, general production chief, and chief executive in charge of all productions also for the same company. Among the many successful films which have come under his supervision are Singing Fool, Noah's Ark and My Man.

ZUKOR, ADOLPH. B. Hungary, about 1874. Grey hair. Ht. 5 ft. 3 in. Married; one son.
Journeyed to the United States when fifteen years of age and there began his business career in the fur trade. Later, an experiment with one of the early "flicks" with which he toured about the country led him to take a much more active interest in this new form of entertainment, with the result that he began making full-length films and concentrating on creating his own stars (one of them being Mary Pickford). This, it can be said with little exaggeration, set an example upon which much of Hollywood's present prosperity and success is based. Is president of the Paramount Company, formed by him in 1912.
WAYS TO FILM SUCCESS

It is the constant dream of many hundreds of people to achieve fame and fortune as stars in motion pictures; as constantly the question "How?" is being asked. The Editors of THE WORLD FILM ENCYCLOPEDIA invited six successful players to recount the means by which they attained their positions. The narratives are diverse enough to prove that there is no royal road; that hard work, determination, and a proportion of good luck have played parts in their achievements.

"I WAS BROKE"—by RONALD COLMAN
(United Artists' Player)

MY father gave me my first glimpse of the films. I was eleven when we went together to the old Earl's Court Exhibition. It was a catchpenny show—bands, whirligigs, fortune-tellers, coconut shies; all the antique dreamland of plaster and paint, noise and laughter. There was one new attraction with a sign over its cavernous entrance. It read: "Animated Pictures."

We went in. Dark and stuffy as the interior was, I remember that it seemed doubly black and awful when I caught sight of the screen. They were showing an express train which came rushing out of the tunnel straight at us. A pianist played some bass chords, a drummer wildly rubbed together two pieces of sandpaper. I was as good as tied to the railway track. That was the first film I ever saw.

It was years later, after I had worked variously in a shipping office, in the Army during the war, and on the stage, that I first found myself before a film camera. After having been invalided out of the Army in 1916, I had to do something and the stage, in which I had always been interested as an amateur, seemed obvious.

I was playing in Damaged Goods when George Dewhurst, one of the pioneers of the British cinema, came into my dressing-room on a memorable evening. "I am going to make a two-reel comedy," he told me, "and I want you for the star juvenile part. It will give you a fortnight's work."

"Who wrote it?" I asked.

"I did," replied George, "and I am going to direct it, too. And I'm going to be the cameraman as well! It will be good."

Up till then I had never had the slightest notion of such a thing as acting in a film. But I said: "How much do I get?"

"Well," said George, "it's the leading part. I want to do the right thing by you. I'll pay you a pound a day, not counting Sundays."

The offer became a serious proposition at once. I well remember how I tried to be calm before this capitalist and to accept carelessly. Miss Phyllis Titmuss, who was so successful on the London stage, was engaged to play opposite me. We had one vacant room in a house rigged up as a studio, and when we wanted to change some interior scene, I found I had also to play the leading part in moving the furniture around. It took a lot of moving, too, to make the room look like a different one!

I believe that film was never shown. It was just as well. If I had seen myself on the screen, I don't think I could have withstood the shock. As for George, he was a man of iron under any conditions.

A few weeks later, another cinema frontiersman approached me. He said:

"Are you good in pictures?"
"Great!" said I.
"How many have you made?"
"One!"
"What salary do you expect?"
"Thirty pounds a week."
"I'll give you six."
"Done!" I cried—and almost embraced him.

After this I began to play odd parts—and sometimes leading ones—fairly often, but for another three years my main interest was the stage. Then Cecil Hepworth persuaded me to give my whole time to pictures and, with him, I made A Son of David. It was in this film that I had my first look at my screen shadow. It was dreadful!

However, I persevered—though I admit I was a very bad actor in those early films. Finally, in 1920, when the unemployment problem was becoming the biggest question of the day, I decided to take what few shillings I had saved and sail to America. Several film managers had given me notes of introduction to American picture people, including D. W. Griffith and Jules Brulatour.

New York—that golden gate—proved to be effectively locked. I found all the New York studios closed, as a result of the bad slump in business. My money was soon gone; my letters of introduction could not be presented at the barred doors of the film studios and I found a return to the stage imperative. Eventually I got a part in the touring company of East is West, and that tour took us right across the United States to Los Angeles.

Like Valentino

Would it be any easier to get a film part in California than in England and New York? I headed for the cinema studios; I haunted Hollywood; but I had no introductions there and I could not even get in.

I found an agent, told him what I had done, and asked him: "Do you think there might be a chance for me in Hollywood?"
"I wonder!" said he.

Just that. Nothing more. And I walked out.

I had my first chance in American films because two people thought I looked like Valentino. They were Henry King, the film director, and Lillian Gish. They were planning to film The White Sister and wanted an actor who looked like an Italian—me! So the road was open. With Miss Gish and Henry King to help me, I found The White Sister the greatest acting experience I had ever been through. Whatever doubts I had about my devotion to pictures were dispelled. This was to be my field.
"I OWE IT TO MY HUSBAND"
—by BARBARA STANWYCK
(Warner Brothers Star)

I OWE to my husband the fact that I am a film star. In these days of modern marriages and feminine independence that statement sounds to many people a little fantastic; but that is the way it happened.

The story starts some time back when I spent my time kicking a leg for the amusement of the patrons of Texas Guinan’s famous night club in New York. They called me by my real name—Ruby Stevens—in those days.

One night Frank Fay, one of Broadway’s greatest stars, walked in. I admired him from a distance, but it seemed hardly likely that we should ever meet; and yet, before very long Ruby Stevens had become Mrs. Frank Fay. Before very much longer she had also become Barbara Stanwyck, and Frank managed to get me the job of leading lady in the play Burlesque. For a year or two we were content with the successes that both of us gained on Broadway, but then came the revolutionizing of the film industry by the introduction of talking pictures, back in 1929.

With everything in the melting-pot, Hollywood was eager for stage talent. They needed actors and actresses who knew how to put emotion, tragedy, laughter, into the spoken word. One by one, all the greatest Broadway stars were offered contracts. Of course, Frank was one of the number, and he accepted a job with Joseph Schenck.

Meanwhile we were appearing at the Club Richman in New York, and one evening I was invited over to the table of a strange young man, who told me his name was Irving Thalberg; that he was from Hollywood; that my work interested him; and that he wondered if I had ever thought of working in pictures. The name Thalberg meant little or nothing to me, and I told him casually that, as Frank was due on the West Coast quite soon, I should probably go with him. I even promised airily enough to drop around and see him at the M.G.M. Studios some time. That was all I knew of Hollywood when we eventually left for film headquarters.

While Frank was making musical pictures like The Show of Shows, I managed to secure a part in The Locked Door with Rod La Rocque. That film was so bad it nearly locked the door of my screen future. I began to hate Hollywood. After a long time Warner Bros. gave me a test. I still hated Hollywood; was bewildered and confused by it. My test was as much a failure as my first screen effort.

It was then that Frank Fay’s hand went to the moulding of my career. Without telling me—and I did not find out for a long time afterwards—he went to Harry Cohn, chief of Columbia Pictures, and offered to pay my salary and the cost of dressing me if only they would give me a chance. They did give me a chance, although they refused Frank’s offer, and I played with little more than medium success in an unimportant film. I was still unenthusiastic about Hollywood and quite ready to return to the old happy days in New York; but Frank was still fighting on my behalf.

When he heard that another picture was being prepared by Columbia he tackled Frank Capra and fought, argued, demanded that I should be given the leading part. He showed them bits from my previous films; he dared them to deny that I was capable of playing an emotional role. Eventually he persuaded them. And Capra cast me as lead in Ladies of Leisure.

It was that part which gave me my first taste of success and determined me to remain in Hollywood. It was that part which secured for me more and more roles and, now, a starring contract with Warner Bros. And it was my husband, Frank Fay, whom I have to thank for the chance. It is Frank to whom I owe all the success that has come my way.

"I WAS SIGHT-SEEING"

—by HAROLD HUTH

(Gainsborough and British Lion Player)

ANYONE who, reading this, hopes to get into films by copying my example, would be well advised to make up his mind a little sooner in life than I did. I had spent eighteen years in the motor trade before I even thought of facing the camera. In fact, I didn’t think about it at all until one afternoon, when I was taken to look over the Gainsborough Studios on a sight-seeing tour.

It may seem strange to those who know me now as a stage and film actor to think that I spent all those years doing something quite different. It will seem even more strange when I tell you how closely I have always been in touch with the acting profession. I have an aunt, Miss Eva Moore, an uncle, H. V. Esmond, a cousin, Jill Esmond, and another cousin, Roland Pertwee, who are all well known in the theatre.

It was Roland, novelist and playwright, who was finally responsible for my side-step into films. He came along one day and asked if I would like to see a film studio, an invitation which I eagerly accepted. We drove out to Islington where T. Hayes Hunter was making One of the Best.

At first I was not particularly interested in the acting or the production. What fascinated my mechanical mind was all the complicated mechanism and electric paraphernalia which was used for lighting the studio. It was quite by chance, during a break in his work, that Hayes Hunter strolled across, looked me up and down, and asked if I would like to play a small part. He thought, apparently, that I looked rather military and he wanted someone to wear a uniform. I remember thinking that it was rather a joke at first but, by the end of the day, my imagination was caught by it all. I determined to let someone else carry on motor engineering for the future. My time should be given to the cinema.

As things turned out in those first years, most of my time was given to the stage and it was here that I first attained any prominence, playing with Fay Compton in Dishonoured Lady. Later I had a part in the stage production of The Outsider, when it was revived at the Apollo Theatre in 1930. It was this part that brought me back full circle into films again. Harry Lachman was to direct the screen version of the play, and I suppose he found it pretty obvious to cast me in the same part that I had so recently filled in the West End.
It was early in 1932 that Sinclair Hill put me into The First Mrs. Fraser to play opposite Joan Barry, and it is from that moment that I personally feel my successful screen career should date, for it was then that I began to feel an ease and certainty in my work. Joan is sympathetic, charming, altogether delightful, and playing opposite her made the weeks spent on The First Mrs. Fraser an uninterrupted pleasure. Since then we have been cast together several times, notably in the British Lion film Sally Bishop, and I hope that our partnership will continue far into the future.

I entered films by chance; I returned to them by hard work and study in the theatre; and I hope to remain in them for the pleasure that the work gives me.

"I WAS AN ARTIST'S MODEL"

—by GWILI ANDRE

(Radio Player)

HERE I am in Hollywood where, they tell me, I have been an immediate success. They tell me I am another Garbo. They tell me I am another Dietrich. They tell me I am a star.

Personally I am a little dazed. It has all been so rushed and rather like a dream, this excursion from the life I used to lead in New York into the glare and hustle of the world of films. A few months ago my life consisted of staying still for long periods. Now I seem to do nothing but move about the whole time. A few months ago I was an artist's model; now I am a film artiste.

If there is a royal road to success on the films I suppose I have trodden it, but I am afraid it is not one along which others can follow, unless they, too, can command the colossal shares of good fortune which first put my feet on the way.

I belong by birth and upbringing to the world of art and artists. I was born in Copenhagen and lived for years with my father who is a jeweller and quite a successful painter. I cannot tell you how often he used to do portraits and sketches of me, but I grew quite used to "sitting" as his model during the years of my childhood. Then, a little over three years ago an aunt of mine, who lives in Florida, invited me to stay. I jumped at the invitation and, after some months of playing in the sun, my aunt took me to New York.

Quite soon I had made up my mind to remain there, and I looked for work. The one thing I knew was how to sit still, and so I was able to get jobs modelling for artists. In a short time my days were fully occupied with this work, and I suppose my face and figure have appeared on the covers of most American magazines. There is good money to be earned in this way. Not long before I came to Hollywood I was making as much as 500 dollars a week. Indeed, I suppose it was only the thirst for new adventure and new experience that made me accept the movie offer when it did come, for the rewards were not so great.

In America they have a term "take you for a ride," which comes front gangster slang and means that one is taken on a trip against one's will (usually with an unpleasant ending). I was "taken for a ride" into the talking pictures, but the ending has been more pleasant than one who knew nothing about acting or talkies had any right to expect.

I had no dreams and no ambitions to go on the films. I love New York and the life on Broadway and Fifth Avenue. One night I was at the Central Park Casino with a party. In walked a man who was well known to everyone but me as a big executive in Radio Pictures. Within a few hours he had offered me a contract to study for pictures in Hollywood. I could have been no more surprised if he had walked in and offered me the Koh-i-noor diamond.

At the end of January I signed a contract with David Selznick, and at the end of February they had cast me as leading lady to Richard Dix in The Roar of the Dragon. This was another piece of colossal good fortune, for there is a saying in Hollywood that it is lucky to play opposite Richard Dix. There is something about him which helps a novice, and Hollywood youngsters all long to be in his pictures. I know why.

Dix taught me more in the few weeks spent on making that picture than all the directors, assistant-directors, camera-men, make-up artists and other experts had instilled in me during the weeks of training. Though I cannot thank him for the fact that I ever came to Hollywood it is entirely due to his help that I shall stay here.

"I DID IT BY ACCIDENT"

—by RICHARD ARLEN

(LITERALLY, I got into pictures by accident; in fact, I was carried in on a stretcher.

I had left America before she entered the fighting, to enlist as a member of the Canadian Flying Corps. I had been to France; I had fought; and in 1919 I found myself free, white and twenty. A little too free, indeed, because even in those spacious days livings were not so easy to pick up. For a time the Texas oilfields gave me some sort of existence, but eventually I arrived in Hollywood with just twenty-two dollars and quite a lot of hope. It really is lucky that hope springs so eternally, because I was down to my last cent while making the rounds of the studios. For three weeks, indeed, I could allow myself only fourteen cents a day as living expenses.

Practically my last dish of pork and beans had gone when some kindly being gave me a job on the Paramount lot. I had been striving to break my way into films with dreams of starring parts and bright lights; I was in films all right, but my job was in one of the film laboratories and consisted largely of delivering messages on a motor-cycle.

That machine was the indirect author of my eventual success. I was speeding down one of the "streets" in the Paramount Studios when I achieved a wonderful skid and ended up in a heap against the wall with a broken leg. There is a hospital on the Paramount lot, and they took me there. I don’t know what guiding star brought one of the casting directors to my bedside, but there he arrived, and I suppose it was sympathy more than anything else which prompted him to promise me a job as an extra when I recovered.
I was started at the usual extra pay of a few dollars per day's work. I was in films, but only just. There were many weary months, but eventually someone else took a look at me, failed to laugh, and there I was, with a featured role in Vengeance of the Deep; quite soon afterwards there I was again with a rather larger part in In the Name of Love; and almost immediately afterwards Paramount gave me a contract.

They cast me as leading man in Volcano, tried me for eight days, lost their patience, and I was out.

It is thanks only to Jobyna Ralston, now my wife, that I did not quit the pictures. She blamed me for even thinking of it, until I determined to fight on and win. I fought on and began to find more and better parts. In the end they gave me that role in Wings which established me; and incidentally the role which made it possible for me to marry Jobyna, which I did immediately after the production was finished.

I have never regretted making my career in films, and I intend staying in films for a long time. They may have carried me in on a stretcher, but they'll have to take me out in a bathchair!

"I WON A COMPETITION"

—by MOLLY LAMONT
(British International Picture Player)

"ONE—two—three—hop; one—two—three—point the toe, so—hop."

These words were part of my daily life only two and a half years ago. To-day, when in moments of retrospect I consider all that has passed, they seem the echoes from a past as distant as a former existence.

At seventeen I was a teacher of dancing to all the young hopefuls of Scotborough, a suburb of Durban; to-day I am a film star at Elstree, the Hollywood of the British Empire.

Much luck, some considerable effort, and constant hard work are responsible for my metamorphosis, which began with a competition organized by a South African newspaper to find a girl who should worthily represent the Dominion in British filmdom. Many friends prevailed upon me to submit a photograph. In order to stand some chance against the beauties for which South Africa is famous, I posed in a dramatic attitude with dishevelled hair and terror-stricken eyes. Despite the strategy, I was the most dumbfounded female in Africa when I was declared the winner. The prize was a year's contract with British International Pictures and all expenses from Africa to Elstree, the return fare being deposited against my failure to make good.

My arrival in England is unforgettable, particularly when contrasted with my leave-taking from Durban, amid cheering multitudes, showers of flowers, flying bunting and blaring bands. I had left home as good as a star already; I arrived at Southampton in a freezing wind, dense fog and splendid isolation. Representives of British International Pictures greeted me kindly, but England was blissfully unconscious of my presence.
ELISSA LANDI at the gate of her beautiful Hollywood home.
MARIE DRESSLER'S house with its glorious sub-tropical creepers.
COLLEEN MOORE at the swimming pool of her home.
MARION NIXON'S home is luxuriously furnished.
There were no bands, no flowers and no cheers. My mother and sister and I clung to each other, strangers in a strange land.

As soon as I had recovered from the journey, I made my first test. It was as nerve-racking an ordeal as any ever devised by the Spanish Inquisition. I look back now on hours of elocution lessons; on arduous days spent in training as an "extra"; on long periods of total immobility while experiments were made for make-up; on anxious and sleepless nights given over to pondering possible failure, while days in the studio were spent in badgering directors to give me a chance.

There are, however, other recollections which compensate; my first line; my first small part as a maid; my first heroine role; my first leading part; my first Press notice; my first specially designed gown; not to mention my first glance in a mirror after I had been turned from a brunette to a golden blonde at the command of Jacqueline Logan and Mary Field; directors of Strictly Business; and then my first starring role opposite Gene Gerrard.

Still more thrilling is the thought that a competition winner—and one from a distant country at that—has achieved an annual renewal of contract each of the three years that she has been here.

Yes. I have had a very successful start, and a very fortunate one. I can feel my feet placed more firmly on the ladder that leads to the height of film fame. Yet do not imagine that I feel over-confident, for there are many influences in a British film studio to counteract the swelling head. The people about one would soon tease away boastfulness; moreover, I am my own severest critic, although South Africa must run me rather close, as witness the solitary reference made in the South African Press to my small effort in Uneasy Virtue. I played as a maid, the first of my early roles, which was seen some time later at home. It was their first opportunity of discussing my film prospects, but their comments were confined to one curt phrase: "She sneezes well."

“WAMPAS BABIES”

Every year a meeting is held of the Western Association of Motion Picture Advertisers (abbreviated to “Wampas”). This is, in fact, a gathering of publicity and advertising executives connected with the Hollywood film industry. At their annual deliberations they award, among other things, certificates of merit to thirteen “baby” stars. These are young women newcomers to the screen whose work has augured great promise for their future success. It is interesting to study the lists published below, going back to 1922, and to see in how many instances the judgment of Wampas has been vindicated.

AWARDS OF MERIT

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences was founded on May 11, 1927, and should not be confused with "Wampas," which is described on page 306. The A.M.P.A.S. is an association of those concerned intimately with the production of films, and its members include the leaders in acting, directing, technical work, and writing. As with "Wampas," so the A.M.P.A.S. has developed a system of annual awards, which are much prized by those who gain them. We publish below a list of honours given for merit between the years 1927-1931.

ROUND HOLLYWOOD

"Hollywood" is a vague term, embracing all film land and all the stars. Here is a concise description of Hollywood—the place *

by

A. L. GRAHAM

LOS ANGELES, the city of the Angels!

Not so very many years ago the bright California sun shone brightly down on a peaceful little Pacific town with attractive little stucco haciendas shining white and cool under the swaying palm-trees and the vivid red-tile roofs. An indolent and attractive Mexican atmosphere invaded the place, and it was here that the pioneers of the film business decided to make their early Western pictures, or Horse Operas as they were tolerantly called. The dawn of the motion picture was thus heralded in this small but attractive town of Los Angeles, some five hundred miles south of the then better-known San Francisco.

In 1910 the business was getting into its stride. Three years later saw the Griffiths and the Cecil B. De Mille making their full-length features, and the rise of such favourites as Dustin Farnum, Wallace Reid, Blanche Sweet, and the Gish sisters. The old Lasky company in 1913 made that grand old epic, The Squaw Man, and people began to look at the West Coast town with increasing wonderment while intrepid producers, with vision and enthusiasm, settled down outside the city of the Angels at a country place eight miles away, called Hollywood. The city of the Angels, Los Angeles, then became the city of the Angles—Camera Angles!

And so to-day we find that Los Angeles is on a par with San Francisco; two giant cities, the greatest in the West of America—powerful, up-to-date, almost ultra-modern towns with towering buildings and congested streets. And, whereas Los Angeles once smiled benignly at her young sister and suburb, Hollywood—to-day Hollywood exists only for the visitors and the film-struck. To-day the people of Los Angeles have ceased to watch and to wonder; Hollywood has become a little town of its own and Los Angeles is not really interested in it any more.

Slightly to the north-west of Los Angeles, Hollywood is conveniently situated near the famous Pacific Ocean, the attractive hilly district of Hollywood-land, socially smart Beverly Hills, cozy Burbank at the foot of some picturesque hills and Universal City and the San Fernando Valley to the north of the town. Farther out to the west, nearer the sea, there is Culver City; and at the sea there are several beaches of lovely yellow sand and foaming breakers, the more important being Santa Monica and Malibu.

Round Hollywood

On arriving at the Southern Pacific or Santa Fe stations in Los Angeles the visitor might expect to see the studios in Los Angeles itself, but Hollywood is a good eight miles' drive from Los Angeles proper. For Los Angeles is useful to the film colony only for large and smart shops, theatres and cinemas, and the famous Biltmore and Ambassador Hotels where the stars sometimes dance. At the Ambassador, for instance, the "Stars' Night" is on Tuesday. The Cocoanut Ball Room, in the world-renowned Cocoanut Grove, is a large dance-room in the hotel where the famous film people sup or dance without fuss or bother. There you might meet Constance Bennett, Joan Marsh, Ginger Rogers, Cary Grant, or Ricardo Cortez, and many others. On Wednesdays the Grove is filled with a high-spirited crowd of Collegians from the near-by University of Southern California, the "pet" Varsity of the movie moguls.

Hollywood Boulevard.

The famous Hollywood Boulevard consists of shops of all kinds and sizes, including many "Five and Tens," i.e., sixpenny, or five and ten cent stores! The nearest studio from the Boulevard is the Warner Studio on Sunset Boulevard—some distance away. The Columbia Studio and Radio Studio are on Gower Street. Next door to Radio there is the famous Paramount Studio. The old Fox Studios are quite a walk away.

In the other direction, on the way to the sea, there are the Metropolitan and United Artists and Educational Studios, while farther out, on route to the ocean, there are the new Fox Studios at Fox Hills. Their old studio on Western Avenue houses executives and "carries" the extra pictures when there is too much work at the newest studios.

Five miles from Hollywood is Culver City, in which will be found the Pathé, the Hal Roach Studios, and the mighty Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios.

Returning to the Hollywood Boulevard, which is the best place for headquarters, you can go north to the First National Studios tucked away at the hill-side, a lovely valley that can be uncomfortably warm in the summer when the California sun is at its best! About three miles farther on, that is, say, six miles from Hollywood, Universal City is reached—it is the home of the Laemmle Universal Pictures. Here there is real countryside, and there are wide, open spaces taking the place of the small town atmosphere of Culver City. Pasadena is about fifteen miles away, and is one of the loveliest little towns imaginable. In Pasadena Rose Bowl important football matches are played. All the filmfolk motor over to see the game on New Year's Day.

Most of the important film people live in the beautiful district of Beverly Hills, where many beautiful homes have been built. Jeanette MacDonald, Frances Dee, Paul Cavanagh, Maurice Chevalier, Rowland V. Lee, and many others live in this picturesque district. Beverly Hills Hotel is a centre of relaxation and pleasure.

The beaches at Santa Monica, Venice, and Malibu (pronounced Malyboo) are favourite haunts of film people, especially in the summer. Some even live by the sea all the year round, and motor to their work every day. Others have week-end residences, and among the most famous is Marion Davies's "week-end cottage" at Santa Monica—a cottage with forty bed-rooms! Nearby is the famous Will Rogers polo field. At Venice, a few hundred yards from Santa Monica (and some distance from Malibu), there are round-abouts, swings, switchbacks, and other diversions.

Back at our headquarters—is it the Roosevelt Hotel opposite the famous Grauman's Chinese Theatre, or a mere room in an apartment house off the Boulevard?—we decide to dine, so we choose, perhaps, Musso and Franks and perhaps try a delicious steak. Or perhaps we will go to Henry's, where we may see Chaplin or Stan Laurel; and so on to the Pantages Theatre, or to the Chinese to witness the latest super-hit from the studios.

Afterwards, perhaps, we journey to the Blossom Room at the Roosevelt, or the Montmartre, or to the Brown Derby for a coffee. This, too, is a good place for luncheon. Wallace Beery, Virginia and John Gilbert, Wallace Forde, Jameson Thomas, Pat O'Brien, Constance Cummings, or Frank Fay with wife, Barbara Stanwyck, may be here. Then, if the visitor wants something less pretentious (although one seldom dresses in Hollywood), there is the amusing B.B.B. Cellar with its odd cabaret turns; or there is Al Levy's Tavern across the road from the Derby at Vine Street. At Culver City there is the new Frolics Club where, in summer, one can dance with the stars and where the stars above twinkle merrily down from a ceiling that is the sky!

For the thrill-lover there is a motor-racing track quite near, and, just off the Boulevard, a stadium for boxing on a Friday night. For wrestling and boxing we shall go to the stadium in Los Angeles on a Tuesday.

For the lovers of serious music, there is the celebrated Hollywood Bowl, where to the chirping of a million grasshoppers, symphony orchestras play and enchant the world-renowned star or the dizzy little extra-girl with platinum-dyed hair.

Conveniently situated, a mere sixty miles away (distance is nothing in America!) there is Lake Arrowhead up in the mountains, and from the sunny shores of the Pacific, where bathing-costume-clad beauties splash in the surf, it is possible to dash up to the lake and enjoy winter sports, skiing, ice-skating, and snowballing. And down south there is merry Mexico where, just over the border, there are saloon-bars and gambling, and gay, fantastic tangos!

There is, too, the famous Los Angeles Coliseum, which is used for football matches and the like. Then, there is the famous island of Catalina, where fishing, bathing, and dancing can be indulged in.

The smartness of the Ambassador Hotel, the Brown Derby, or the Mona Lisa Restaurant; the friendliness of Henry's Café; the amusing sandwich-places where you sit in your car and waitresses bring you trays of food; the football mad crowds; the quiet and lovely Beverly Hills; the fascinating houses in Hollywood-land overlooking Hollywood; the ever-winking lights of Los Angeles; the fantastic roads leading to the hilly district of Outlook, and the sparkling, vivid blue sea—all these things and more make Hollywood kaleidoscopic and interesting.
ROUND THE STUDIOS

America

Burbank

Warner Bros. and First National Studios, Burbank, California.

BEHIND a busy steam-laundry, overlooked by Beverly Hills, First National produced their first pictures on an open-air stage with the only lighting then possible—the sun.

It was not until March, 1926, that the foundations of the present Warner Brothers and First National studios were laid at Burbank. Before that, the two companies which threw in their lots together had studios literally "all over the place." They used to make pictures now here, now there. And what with transporting scenery, equipment, and players hundreds of miles at expensive railway rates, the executives soon saw that a great central studio must be built.

So they covered more than 70 acres with buildings They laid out more than four miles of paved streets. They appropriated 1,100 acres of mountain, river and meadow which lay behind Burbank, so that they could have any sort of location they wanted, from desert to jungle, at a moment's notice.

On June 5th, 1926, the great place was complete. The very first picture to be made in the new two-and-a-half-million-pound studios was The Masked Woman, starring Anna Q. Nilsson.

Then the talkies came and Warner Bros. was the firm that introduced them to a wondering world and a staggering film-world.

Nowadays, Burbank Studios fairly boil with activity. Warner Bros. and First National pictures are produced at the rate of something like 70 a year, as well as many Vitaphone features.

There are twelve large sound-proof stages. There is, among other specialized departments, a wonderful research library. This is a room which, to the casual visitor, looks like the reading-room of any comfortable club. In reality, it is an encyclopedic store which contains information on every possible and impossible subject which might have a bearing on scene, costume or story. There is a barber-shop, built and decorated in the Spanish style, with pantiles, "patio"—which we would call "veranda"—and cool white stone arches. There are splendid laboratories, all white enamel, glass plate, and porcelain. Enough electricity is generated to light a town of ten thousand inhabitants.

When first completed, the studios comprised 44 buildings, with a total floor space of 515,000 square feet; now it is bigger and better than ever.

* Refer to maps: Plates 57, 58, 59, 61.
Incidentally, it is interesting to note that, between June, 1930 and May, 1931, this studio supported the "colour film" movement to the extent of making nine films in colour.

Culver City

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Corporation, Culver City, California.

SHOULD you look down from an aeroplane over Culver City, you will see, spread out beneath you, a sharply-defined rectangle of a town. It is bounded on one side by a long, straight road, on another by a broad, tree-lined boulevard, while a third imposing highway leads up to the main gates of this walled city.

You will notice that the town, in spite of its size, consists of eight main buildings of gigantic area. It is here that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer make their films.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, where Greta Garbo, Clark Gable, Joan Crawford, Ramon Novarro, Norma Shearer, Wallace Beery and a dozen other first-class favourites make their films. M.G.M.—with the "roaring lion" trademark—whose studio-gate is as difficult to pass as the entrance to a lion's den. There are few privileged visitors strolling between the big buildings. M.G.M. stars are closely guarded.

Should you be one of the favoured few, you will see laundries in the Culver City precincts, where all sorts of cleaning is done, from wispy gowns to yards and yards of linen and canvas. There is more than one "drug-store," where you may buy soap, razor-blades, or the ice-cream beloved by all Americans. There is a modiste's shop and a restaurant where you may eat the finest meal in California.

The cutting-rooms, property-vaults, test-rooms and laboratories are the finest of their kind in the world. There are numerous pits and stages for special processes. The dressing-rooms provided for the stars are palatial suites, with reading-room, rest-room, and bath-room with showers and plunges. Ramon Novarro had a piano in his.

Culver City—eight miles from Hollywood, the film-centre—is just another film-centre.

Movietone City

Fox Film Corporation, Movietone City, Westwood, California.

The Fox Film Corporation began its activities in California nearly eighteen years ago on a single open stage surrounded by a fence, opposite the old Mack Sennett studio. A staff of about 100 was the sum total of its production-unit.

Early in 1932, the Fox organization moved from its then studios on Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood, to the enormous £5,000,000 premises of Movietone City, in Beverly Hills. There you find a talking-picture town nearly a mile long and half as wide, containing 108 acres of property. The main studio buildings alone cover a 54-acre space, surrounded by a 14-feet high wall. There are 75 permanent buildings, all fireproof and built of concrete and steel in the most modern style. There are acres of exteriors, duplicate settings, and scenery from every quarter of the globe.

The studios contain 12 sound-stages, each one cooled in summer and heated in winter with washed-air. Outside, there are office-buildings, industrial blocks, a fine clubhouse in its own park, fire and police stations, and a modern café.

All the chief members of the Fox staff have their own bungalows in Movietone City; fifteen were built for the writing-staff alone. There is even a squared-U of buildings, separate and sectionalized, which is known as "Director's Row."

Movietone City has been constructed as a self-supporting and entirely self-contained community. It is laid out in a manner which produces a really fine "landscape" effect in the beautiful surroundings of Beverly Hills. The principal players are catered for even more lavishly than the directors or the writers. Rows of orange trees front their dressing-room windows. Will Rogers has a small, desert-style bungalow with a cactus garden; next door is the thatched-roofed Irish cottage of Janet Gaynor, which was originally built as a studio daytime home for John McCormack, the Irish tenor.

The electricity system at the Fox studio is in itself a marvel. It develops 12,000 electrical horse-power, which would be enough to light a city of 20,000 inhabitants. All this power comes from a huge turbo-electric plant hundreds of miles away in the Sierras. Its initial pressure of 33,000 volts is broken down at the studio electric plant to one of two pressures—2,300 or 220 volts—according to special requirements. Thence it is distributed through the 54 miles of conduit, under Movietone City's five miles of paved streets, to do its work in the thousands of sun-arcs and spotlights used in the studios.

Paramount Studios

Paramount Publix Corporation, 5451, Marathon Street, Hollywood, Cal.

A LITTLE group of film personalities was gathered round a luncheon table in the Paramount studio restaurant on December 30, 1931, to celebrate Hollywood's eighteenth birthday. It was on the morning of December 30, 1913, that Cecil B. De Mille called "camera" for the first scene of The Squaw Man, Hollywood's very first feature-film. It was the initial production of the Jesse Lasky Feature Play Company, now called the Paramount Publix Corporation.

The events which led up to the selection of Hollywood as the centre of the motion picture industry are closely linked with Paramount's history. Cecil B. De Mille and Jesse Lasky met in New York, in the autumn of 1913, to discuss their plans for the winter vaudeville season. They were joined by Dustin Farnum, who had just finished a tour in the stage play, The Squaw Man. Lasky and De Mille decided to form a film company, and invited Farnum to join them in putting up £1,000 capital. He refused, but agreed to work for them on a weekly salary. It was a fateful decision that cost him several million dollars in after years, when the two originators of Paramount were reaping the rewards of their enterprise.

De Mille went west from New York, intending to choose a site for his studio in Arizona. But the weather in Arizona was cold and cloudy that winter, and he went on to the little town of Hollywood. There he rented a lime-grove in which was a barn. That barn was Hollywood's first film studio.

To-day Paramount has a 26-acre studio-town, in which 1,600 people work. There are fifteen sound-proof stages and twenty-five other structures with more than 100 distinct departments. At Calabassas, outside Hollywood, is the Paramount 2,700-acre ranch for exterior locations.

In the laboratory 78,000,000 feet of release-prints were prepared in one year, the finished celluloid witness to the work of 46 contracted players, 36 directors, 40 writers, and 55 camera-men.

Paramount is Hollywood epitomized. It has developed into a huge, organization, and produces 65 feature-films and countless shorts in a year.

Yet, even more important was its unpretentious beginning, for had there been no Paramount, there would have been no Hollywood film-land.

Radio Pictures Studios

Radio Pictures, Inc., 780, Gower Street, Hollywood, California.

Immediately adjoining the Paramount Studios and not far from the United Artists, Columbia, and Metropolitan production-centres, lies the Gower Street studio of Radio Pictures. It is a studio on a grand scale. Ten huge stages offer space for the production of six full-sized pictures. For location work, four sound-trucks are in constant readiness to cope with the recording operations.

The Radio studio is another city-in-miniature. It has its own police-force of twenty constables. It has, of course, its own fire-brigade, with water-tower and sprinkler-system all complete. There is a studio telephone-exchange, with thirty-three trunk lines, and operators dealing with three hundred personal calls per day.

Radio prides itself on its restaurant, which seats two hundred and twenty-five people and serves about five hundred meals a day. The studio even has its own hospital, equipped for all emergencies, where there are three beds and a trained nurse on duty from 7 a.m. until 1 a.m.

Another feature of the Radio organization is its story department, which is modelled on entirely new lines. Early in 1932 a "story cabinet" of four members was formed, under the supervision of David O. Selznick, the vice-president in charge of production.

Each member of the "cabinet" has his or her special duty. There is Adela Rogers St. Johns Hylands, a celebrated American novelist, who supervises stories for women; H. N. Swanson, editorial director of a famous American college magazine, serves on the cabinet in selecting stories with an appeal to youth; Kenneth MacGowan, a well-known stage-producer, sits in judgment on stage plays, selecting those suitable for screen adaptation; and James Seymour, formerly story-editor at the Pathé studio, is responsible for the choice of original plots contrived specially for the screen.

As a sidelight on the scarcity of real talent in film-writing, it should be explained that one of the first things the "cabinet" did in its search for stories was to seek young Americans as apprentice writers in the studio. Of seven hundred applicants in the first few weeks, two were chosen!

United Artists' Studio

United Artists Corp., 1041, N. Formosa Avenue, Hollywood, California.

UNITED ARTISTS in Hollywood is the most romantic of all the world’s film studios. The story of its conception and inauguration, its history and its policy, is rich with the romance of the most famous film-stars.

The germ of the United Artists idea came from Benjamin P. Schulberg, one-time shorthand writer and book reviewer, and later a member of the Famous Players-Lasky film organization, under the leadership of Adolph Zukor.

Schulberg was thoroughly familiar with the prices paid by cinemas all over the world for pictures by Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks. Charlie Chaplin was at the crest of his popularity-wave and D. W. Griffith was Hollywood’s best-known director. Accordingly, Schulberg brought it about that these four famous personalities should sever their connexions with all other producing organizations and form a new group, to be called “Allied Artists”—a title since changed to “United Artists.” It was thus that the United Artists’ stars found themselves in the position of being their own masters, instead of paid employees.

Robin Hood, one of their first ventures, was made at the Santa Monica Boulevard studio in 1920 and established new standards of screen entertainment and financial success. Costing £140,000, it made £600,000, and Douglas Fairbanks immediately followed it up with The Thief of Bagdad, an extravaganza on gorgeous lines, on which nearly £400,000 was spent.

Meanwhile Charlie Chaplin was making his films in the Sunset Boulevard section of United Artists studios. The Gold Rush was one of his masterpieces, and he wrote and directed A Woman of Paris, the wonderful drama in which Adolphe Menjou made his first triumph.

So much for United Artists’ early history. The studio stands to-day for the same policy as always. It is run and part-owned by this same group of stars, who are joint shareholders. It is a studio of strange and impressive corners, such as the special private suite, with its separate entrance, reserved exclusively for Sam Goldwyn. The dressing-rooms are unsurpassed for luxury. Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford often live in theirs when engaged on important filming, so well constructed and laid out are their quarters.

Certainly the United Artists’ lot breathes screen history and friendliness and comfort, but it is also rich in its technical perfection. Perhaps this, more than any other reason, is why new people are constantly clamouring for admission to the studios. Howard Hughes (of Hell’s Angels fame) has moved in; Harold Lloyd now works there, although his films are released by Paramount. The arrival of producers of this calibre, however, is sufficient tribute to the quality of United Artists’ studio accommodation.

Universal City

Universal Pictures Corporation, Inc., Universal City, California.

ONE of the most powerful film organizations in Hollywood is Universal Pictures Corporation. Its president is Carl Laemmle—“Uncle” Carl—loved, feared, and hated in filmdom; a pioneer and a magnate, the writing of whose biography was a task worthy of the pen of John Drinkwater.

The Universal studio is the largest in the world. It covers an area of two hundred and thirty acres on the site of the most celebrated battle of the Spanish-Mexican War. The studio was opened in 1915, and it holds the industry’s record for productions. In 1919 no fewer than forty-two companies were at work in Universal City simultaneously. In 1932 more than twenty-five full-length feature-films, five serials, and one hundred and fifty “shorts” were produced, and the studio budget for 1932 was nearly three and a half million pounds sterling.

Universal City gives regular employment to one thousand workers. It has its own government post-office, as seems fitting and proper for a “city.” There is a zoo, with elephants and lions, monkeys and tigers; there is a poultry farm, with several thousands of chickens. There is large stabling, with many horses. At one time, when “westerns” were at the height of their popularity, Universal City’s inhabitants included a number of cowboys. They were a permanent staff, known as the “Universal Ranch Riders.”

They still keep, on the lot, the largest permanent set in any studio—the huge cathedral replica originally built for The Hunchback of Notre Dame. It might be thought that to keep such a set standing for years is mere waste of space, but it should be noted that it has paid for itself many times over in rentals from other companies who have used it for subsequent productions.

There is a recreation hall for employees. There is a golf course. There is a huge and noisy restaurant, the only one in any studio which is open to the public.

Prior to 1915, Universal had been making pictures in a little studio in Hollywood itself, situated where Gower Street joins Sunset Boulevard. That studio later became the home of Century Comedies until it was burnt down.

Carl Laemmle foresaw the vast growth of the film industry. He foresaw the need of more room and so he moved to what was then a barren bit of desert. He was laughed at by those who considered his action a folly of waste, but 45,000 people came in special trains to see the new wonder!

Thomas Edison and Henry Ford motored down, that first summer, to dedicate the first artificially-lit stage.

On the Universal roster of stars of those days you will find such names as Harry Carey, Mae Murray, Mary MacLaren, Monroe Salisbury, Marie Walcamp, Ella Hall, Fritzi Brunette, Herbert Rawlinson, and Dorothy Phillips; Universal produced one of the first woman directors, Lois Weber.

After the war Universal embarked on a series of super-productions. Erich von Stroheim proved the value of film spectacle with Blind Husbands; and followed it up with Foolish Wives, the first film to be heralded as a “million-dollar picture.” Lon Chaney became famous in a night as The Hunchback of Notre Dame. Hoot Gibson began to build up his reputation as a cowboy star.

When talkies came, Universal City was plunged headlong into the new medium, and was re-equipped with every latest device and mechanism that the new medium demands. But Hollywood veterans sigh for the old days. True, Universal City has a million-dollar developing and printing factory, a scenario department of thirty-five famous writers, a post office, and a golf course. Still, veterans sigh for the days when Universal City was a harum-scarum, haphazard movie-factory, with stars rising in a night and falling in a day, cowboys firing pistols in the streets, and mad ventures turning in a breath to triumphs.

Great Britain

Beaconsfield

British Lion Film Corporation, Ltd., Beaconsfield, Bucks.

Films have brought the hum of modern industry to old, sleepy places.

Beaconsfield, in Buckinghamshire, was a typical English country town, with its wide main crossing, its two main streets empty at most times, and its cluster of quiet weathered houses dreaming under the midday sun.

The British Lion Corporation came, and its studio rose to stir the town to activity. To-day Beaconsfield mothers bring their babies to act in child scenes at the studio (there were fifty of them there one day during the summer). Beaconsfield boys go to see what film stars do to earn their salaries.

The studio is, in effect, a single production unit, under one high roof ridge, but there is ample floor space for all film requirements. Alongside the main building there is a row of flat-roofed workshops, containing plasterers', property, carpenters', and scenery rooms. Separated from the main block by a concrete causeway are projection theatre, offices, and a row of film vaults.

The whole studio stands in a wide tract of grassland surrounded by a high fence. This space is frequently used when a film necessitates the building of extensive exterior sets.

It is essentially a breezy studio, although, these days a sense of sadness still hangs over the place. For the British Lion studios will never be quite the same as they were when Edgar Wallace, the merriest, the most cheerful of all those merry film-makers, was alive, and the ruling genius of the studios. He was, of course, chairman of the British Lion Film Corporation, as well as the author of some of its most successful films. Such films as The Flying Squad originally brought fame to Beaconsfield, when made in silent form; and the talkie version, together with The Old Man, Whiteface, The Frightened Lady, and other Wallace thrillers, met with the same success.

Beaconsfield is not a pretentious studio. It is not built of white marble and chromium, and the café does not run with champaigne. But some of the finest of Britain's films have been made there, and there exists in this country no more efficient and cheerful band of film-makers.

Ealing Green

Just as the Gaumont-British studio stands where it stood in 1914, on one of England's original studio sites, so A.R.P., at Ealing, have built their up-to-date studio not twenty yards from what remains of the old Barker studio, a red-brick and tin hangar which was one of the first film studios in Great Britain.

Contrasted with its neighbour, the A.R.P. studio looks almost impossibly modern. Viewed by itself, it stands out as a typical product of up-to-the-minute thought. From the framed cartoon in the blue-and-white entrance hall (depicting two horses which, tethered together, try in vain to drink from separate troughs) to the glowing cubes of light set in the ceiling, the place breathes modernity and forcefulness.

"Co-operation" is the title of that sketch—for the two horses eventually go together to the one trough.

Basil Dean has caused that word to be emblazoned in foot-high letters on every blank wall. Even the iron cross girders of the £25,000 powerhouse bear the word in huge lettering. The watchword is carried throughout the studio lay-out itself. The cutting-room connects with the projection chamber, and this in turn with a full-sized preview theatre.

The complete sound installation of the two huge floors is interconnected by an elaborate system of microphone lines. On the main floor itself is a squat, compact affair of engine-turned aluminium called the "organ" which, with its rows of stops on a sloping panel, does, indeed, resemble a strange harmonium console. By manipulating the switches and knobs of the "organ" one man can control the camera, lock the studio doors before a "take," mark the film, illuminate the "silence" signs throughout the building, and mute all telephone bells whose sudden whirr might reach the sensitive ear of the microphone.

The comfort of players and staff is well considered. There are rows of softly-lit dressing-rooms, each one with gleaming white bathroom, cheerful walls, and attractive furniture in unstained oak.

The A.R.P. studio restaurant is probably the finest in England. It is known as the "Inn" and, in addition to the scarlet-and-yellow tables and chairs with which it is furnished, it is equipped with a long "snack counter" at which dozens of extras and technicians can lunch quickly and comfortably when time presses.

Next door to the restaurant another big building houses the rehearsal room, fitted with floor of polished parquet, pianos, radio-gramophone, and dais for a band.

The studio block itself is faced by huge iron drop-screen doors, which are frequently raised between "takes," so that plenty of fresh air reaches the sets. Outside an enormous camera tower, originally built for the tenement scene in Looking On the Bright Side, allows camera and crew to be raised or lowered for "new angle" shots above the heads of the crowd on the "lot."

There is a particularly attractive board-room leading out of the café. It is decorated in the modern style which characterizes the whole place. The scenario department is another finely planned and decorated section of the organization, and here the A.R.P. script writers work in comfort and quiet.

Gloria Swanson herself, who considered almost every British studio when looking for a centre for her first British film, chose A.R.P. as being the most suitable studio for her purpose. And with her coming a British studio saw, for the first time, indications of the veneration in which great stars are held in Hollywood; Miss Swanson's table at the "Inn" was screened off from the rest of the room by a gauze screen spangled with silver stars.

Elstree

ENGLAND has no film centre comparable to Hollywood. Film studios have sprung up round London in more haphazard and scattered fashion, from Beaconsfield in the north-west to Islington in the slums. Yet film production in this country is associated in the minds of many people, with Elstree, Herts.

There have been many studios at Elstree. Films were made there, in rough and ready fashion, years ago. From the railway station itself one studio can be seen—that of Audible Filmcraft. It has not, however, been the scene of feature production. Farther along the road stands the Blattner studio, and almost opposite British & Dominions' Imperial studios, which are described on page 390. But towering over all these and actually the largest studio in England, is British International Pictures' 40-acre expanse of buildings and exterior "lots."

The studio in its present form dates from a reconstruction scheme of 1928, when B.I.P. took over the existing buildings and gradually brought the place up to its present standard. There are 9 full-sized production stages, contained in 3 huge blocks. Two of these stages, in a corrugated iron building, represent the original "silent" studio; the rest are all modern additions, spacious, lofty, and provided with the most up-to-date methods of sound-proofing and ventilation.

Three of the sound stages are provided with deep watertight tanks, sunk beneath the floor, which can be used for bathing pool scenes, underwater photography, and so on. A typical example of the use of these tanks was the "flooded submarine" sequence in Men Like These.

It is possible to have 9 films in simultaneous production at the B.I.P. studios. The record to date, however, is 7 pictures, which all occupied floors at the same time in the summer of 1931.

Near the three main studio buildings there is a long, low block which contains the cutting-rooms, laboratories, garage, and studio café, which is one of the best patronized of all British studio restaurants, for it provides meals for many visitors from the Imperial studios, "just over the fence" from B.I.P.

Naturally enough, the various technical departments of so large a studio are correspondingly extensive. The make-up department, for instance, thinks in pounds of grease-paint, crates of powder, and gallons of liquid colour. A crowd of 150 women recently used 12 pints of wet-white in one day at B.I.P. On another occasion 300 "natives" were made up, and 14 large pails full of wet-black were used in one week; that same production called into use more than 100 yards of false hair, which was applied with a gallon of spirit gum.

The carpenters' and plasterers' shops are also on an enormous scale. There are 150 craftsmen employed in them, and they use 50,000 feet of wooden battens a year, as well as 10,000 feet of boarding and something like half a ton of nails a week.
The property department is a marvel of its kind, and the B.I.P. prop men are indefatigable. Asked in one day to provide a balloon basket, six motor-cycles of the kind used by American speed-cops, and a number of Chinese preserved eggs—they "delivered the goods" without hesitation.

B.I.P. have an associated organization in British Instructional Films, whose large single-floor studio is at Welwyn Garden City. Although several full-length pictures have been made here—notably Dance Pretty Lady—the Welwyn studio is used mainly for the production of the excellent Secrets of Nature series.

Elstree (Imperial Studios)

British and Dominions Film Corporation, Ltd., Imperial Studios, Elstree, Herts.

The big Imperial studios of British and Dominions, next door to British International Pictures at Elstree, stand for a great deal in the British film industry. For, as well as their own pictures, B. and D. make 6 films a year for the Paramount organization in this country and, during the summer of 1932, completed an arrangement with United Artists, which guarantees American release for the fine British films made at the Imperial studios.

B. & D. actually came into existence in 1928, when they started making silent films at Cricklewood. They moved to small Elstree premises the following year and made some sound pictures before transferring their activities to the Imperial studios. They have built, added, enlarged and modernized ever since, so that they now have one of the finest film-factories in the country. They employ a staff of 700, exclusive of actual players. They have 9 cameras. They can turn out 36 full-length pictures a year on their 3 sound-stages, each with its own projection-theatre. Their workshops are the finest in the land, with duplicate sets of woodworking machinery and a plasterer's shop staffed by the greatest living experts in this particular medium of make-believe and decorative manufacture. Their stages consume current to the tune of 7,000 amperes. They can accommodate 7 films simultaneously in the cutting-rooms.

Herbert Wilcox, the chief of production at B. & D. and the doyen of British directors, has insisted from the start on a policy of the best and nothing but the best. B. & D. sets are invariably the last word in magnificence: the gowns his stars wear are designed and carried out only by front rank creators of clothes. Wilcox has some of the best talent in England and builds stardom for his players in the true Hollywood style. Lynn and Walls, Jack Buchanan and Sydney Howard were ready-made in the public estimation; but with such stars as Dorothy Bouchier, Anna Neagle, Winifred Shotter and Elsie Randolph, B. & D. have shown their skill, and demonstrated that the starring system is well worth its place in the scheme of screen things.

Islington

A way in the gloomier part of London, in a district of factories, warehouses and slum-dwellings, there stood in the years before the war a power-station which supplied current to the Metropolitan Railway.
The huge chimney of that station, the third highest of London’s smokestacks, still stands; but the buildings beneath it now constitute one of England’s film-studios, the home of Gainsborough Pictures—a producing-company affiliated with the great Gaumont-British organization at Shepherd’s Bush.

The powerful Lasky Corporation, from America, originally bought the site and built a “modern” studio on the spot. That was in 1919. For the next four years Islington Studio was the scene of intensive film-production. Evelyn Brent played there; Mary Glynn made _The Great Day_ and _Perpetua Mary_; the silent version of _Three Live Ghosts_ was made there; and Donald Crisp directed and starred in _The Bonny Briar Bush_.

In 1923 the studio was leased out to various companies. Dorothy Gish was among the distinguished stars at Islington that year, when she starred in _Nell Gwyn_. In the following year three enterprising Londoners—William Freedman, Victor Saville and Michael Balcon—started production at the studio. They were quickly successful and numbered among their players such names as Clive Brook, Betty Compson, Alice Joyce and the McLaglen brothers. The formation of Gainsborough Pictures soon followed and a brilliant series of films began to pour from Islington. The most successful of these pictures were undoubtedly the famous _Rat_ series, with Ivor Novello and Isabel Jeans.

In 1927, Mabel Poulton figured at Islington with her triumphant portrayal of Tessa in _The Constant Nymph_. At the time of the change-over to talkies they made _Taxi for Two_, another Mabel Poulton success, and then _The Return of the Rat_.

In January, 1930, fire completely destroyed the upper of the two stages and the cutting-rooms, writing finis to the career of the Islington studios as they then existed.

Gainsborough opened their re-built and modernized studios in the spring of 1931. They had re-designed the place, but the two-floor system still remains. The lower of the two floors, “No. 1 Stage,” is 6,264 square feet in area, while the upper is 5,244 square feet. Above that is a flat roof, served by the studio-lift. It is used extensively for exterior scenes, as an open-air “lot” would otherwise be unavailable. There are three projection-theatres; one, on the ground floor, is almost as big as a small public cinema, while the two others are in the basement, and are slightly smaller. They are used in conjunction with the 6 cutting-rooms.

Gainsborough studios employ 25 carpenters and 35 electricians a day at Islington when producing any one of the 7 pictures they reckon to make in a year.

Shepherd’s Bush

_GAUMONT_ is to Britain very much what Paramount is to Hollywood. Just as the first studio in Hollywood was a barn in a grove, from which, eventually, the great Paramount organization grew up, so the company which in 1898 made films on Freeman’s Cricket Ground, at Dulwich, now owns the finest studio in Great Britain. And that studio stands in Lime Grove, Shepherd's Bush.

It is odd to think of films being made at all thirty-four years ago, but odder still to realize that thirty years ago Gaumont were making talkies. In 1902 they made films and played gramophone records of the artists synchronized by a method called the "Chronophone." These were shown at the London Pavilion and elsewhere. It is interesting to note that one of these primitive "talkie" players was George Robey, who in 1932 rejoined Gaumont interests in Marry Me.

Gaumont went on working at Dulwich until 1913, when The Life of Richard Wagner was made. Then they built a studio, the first building ever put up in this country solely for the production of films.

This was the famous "glass studio" in Lime Grove, completed in 1914, and was the scene of the successful Ultus, the Man from the Dead series of films, directed by George Pearson. Then came Sally Bishop, now re-made as a talkie.

A new studio was opened soon after 1927, but in 1929 talkies came to revolutionize the film-industry.

Gaumont had big ideas, which they have embodied in yet another new studio, opened in the summer of 1932, on the very site of the old glass-house. It is a huge, modern, white-faced block, its flat roof towering 90 feet above the pavement. Here are five production-stages; dressing-room accommodation for 600 artistes; stars' dressing-rooms, the last word in modern comfort and decoration; laboratories with a minimum output capacity of 2,000,000 feet a week; three private theatres; an orchestration room; nine film-vaults; a 600-seat restaurant; plasterers' and carpenters' shops; property rooms; monitor and recording rooms; all the paraphernalia of the last word in modern film-studios is to be found at Gaumont-British studio in Lime Grove.

They spent nearly half a million pounds on the studios, but still they were not content. Even as this book is being printed more floors and extra buildings are being added at Lime Grove. The production of four films simultaneously will shortly be a simple matter.

Teddington

Warner Brothers-First National Productions, Ltd., Teddington Studios,

WHEN the invading army of Warner Brothers-First National from America occupied the old studios at Teddington they did what might be expected of a powerful American film-company. They laid out £100,000 on enlarging and modernizing the place.

But they refrained from committing the sin, sometimes attributed to American enterprise, of modernization at the expense of beauty and comfort. Teddington was a country-house studio, with spreading gardens, wide lawns of velvety green sloping down to the banks of the Thames. Did they dot the lawns with hideous outbuildings? They did not. They added their laboratories, their office-block, their extra floor-space, unobtrusively, cunningly grafting the new structure to the old. Did they line the pleasant river-bank with concrete or build stone walls where before had been rough hedges of privet? They did not. They left the grounds as they were. More, they employed skilled gardeners that their players might have a pleasance wherein to walk in the cool of the evening when the day’s shooting is done.

Many a fine summer evening has been spent on those wide lawns. There has been tennis; there has been bathing in the foamy water below Teddington Weir; there have been stump-cricket matches. But it must not be imagined that the Teddington people spend all their time dancing on the green and hanging daisy-chains round each other’s necks.
They turned out three films in six weeks during the summer of 1932, and these were not the ordinary scratch-cast “quickies” generally associated with such rapid work, but good-quality feature films, including in their casts players of such calibre as John Stuart, Dorothy Bartlam, Dodo Watts and Janice Adair.

Henry Edwards, who was for some time in possession of the Teddington studio—he made Stranglehold there in 1931—used to plan plans and dream dreams of the development of the old film-centre. The Warner-First National interests have brought those dreams reality, for they have made the place into a model studio. They have ample space for production; they have added a row of comfortable dressing-rooms, a projection-room, cutting and editing-rooms. They have turned disused rooms in part of the old house into clean, airy offices. The old house itself has forty rooms and in it they have made long galleries of guest-rooms, a lofty dining-hall and finely-tapestried drawing-rooms.

At Teddington they introduced the American system of “property baskets.” Instead of long searches in crowded prop-rooms, each property-man has only to make a rapid survey of his own individual basket, kept by the set, to produce any more general kind of “property”, which may suddenly be needed, from a telephone to a needle-and-thread.
Those who have watched the restless waiting sometimes caused by endless rummaging in distant property-vaults will appreciate this improvement.
A small point of studio technique, but it is in the knowledge and practice of such points that they excel at Teddington.

They may have spent £100,000 on new structures and equipment. You may find the latest type of microphone on the set, the latest make of lamp in the electrical store, the most up-to-date form of cutting-apparatus. They may, and undoubtedly do, produce films as original and as technically excellent as any in Great Britain. But for all that, Teddington studio will remain, thanks to the good taste of certain American gentlemen, a pleasantly tree-shaded, flower-decked country seat, with the river laughing at the film-makers as it runs by.

Twickenham

Twickenham Film Studios, Ltd., Alliance Studios, St. Margaret’s, Twickenham.

TRAVELLING by train to St. Margaret’s, Twickenham, across the river from Richmond, you pass, just outside the station, the end of a red-brick building, with a strange, short factory chimney labelled “studio.” That is the Alliance Studio, the home of Twickenham Film Studios, Ltd.
It is the friendliest studio in Great Britain. It looks like a big red barn and it backs right on to the railway-line. In the early days of talkies—when sound-proofing wasn’t what it is to-day—they had to call a halt in shooting every time a train passed—be it electric or not. Nowadays, so far has the science of talkie-making progressed, they need stop only for a steam-train.

Yet this quaint studio with its rambling offices, which look for all the world like converted bed-rooms, was responsible for the second greatest output of films from any British studio in 1930.

Julius Hagen, swarthy and jocose, is the ruling genius at Twickenham. He has attracted some of the finest talent among British film-stars to the "lot." Guy Newall, Franklyn Dyall, Margot Grahame, and Mary Newcomb are some of the players whose work at Twickenham has been frequent and notable. Julius Hagen, too, was the first to recognize the potentialities of Elizabeth Allan. He took her straight from the West End stage-play in which she was appearing, and signed her up on a long-term contract.

Everybody is friendly at Twickenham. The telephone-girl passes your call with a pleasant greeting. The directors are pleased to see you. Even the amazing collection of "property" pictures which hangs outside the main floor seem to smile at you from a hundred frames, from the Laughing Cavalier, with his eyes pierced for peepholes in some long-forgotten spy-drama to the lady a la Kirchner who was used on the wall of a set in another picture.

There is a tiny projection-theatre leading out of the studio, and next to that, the "still" department. Twickenham Studios are very proud of their still-photography, which is possibly the best in this country.

All the sound-recording at Twickenham is done in a mobile van, which serves a dual purpose, since it can be driven from the studio to any location at a moment’s notice.

Walton-on-Thames

_Nettlefold Productions, Hurst Grove, Walton-on-Thames, Surrey._

WALTON studio is one of the historic centres of British film-production. Films have been made there continuously ever since 1898. It was in that year that Cecil M. Hepworth, pioneer of the film industry, started making pictures in the back-garden of his Walton-on-Thames house. His players were himself, his wife, and his son; his studio, a tiny lawn; his developing, printing, and drying laboratories, the kitchen and the scullery sink.

In the early nineteen-hundreds, "Heppy" built his first studio, which was burnt down after a short but energetic career. Another was built on the spot, and it was in this primitive studio, built largely of glass, that the film industry was carried on more assiduously than anywhere else in Great Britain.

Hepworth used to think it a bad week when he had not written, photographed, and sold three or four films. The procedure was simple. He and his players—he began a stock company which included such famous figures as Chrissie White, Alma Taylor, and Stewart Rome in its later years—would gather in the studio at 9 a.m. A story would be written and production started by 11 o'clock. The film would be finished and on its way to London by nightfall. As the sun moved round in the heavens the linen and canvas sets—three-ply and plaster were unknown in the studios in those days—had to be moved also, so that the light coming through the glass walls might shine on the actors. Most shots were made at a range of twenty-five feet and the reason that players in those early films wore the same costume throughout a picture was simply that otherwise they would have been unrecognizable. Thus, the villain generally wore a dashing black costume from beginning to end of a film, and the country squire a suit of loud checks.

When the sun did not shine shooting in the studio was performe held up. On those occasions the company would cheerfully dash off to London to take an "interest" film of some thrilling incident such as the boat-train steaming into Waterloo.

One of Hepworth's most successful early "feature-films" was the famous Rescued by Rover. This epic was more than 250 feet long, a monster of its period. It featured "Rover," "Happy's" own collie dog, which became a figure of world-fame and was Rin-Tin-Tin's predecessor by many years.

Had it not been for the war Walton studios might easily have become the film-centre of the world, for it was not until England was forced to send her film-makers to fight that Hollywood came into its own. Films continued to be made at Walton spasmodically throughout the years of the struggle, and the Government of the day ordered the production of more than one propaganda film at Walton, of which The Belgian Refugee was a typical example.

In 1922 Archibald Nettlefold's organization moved into the studio and produced there until, three years ago, the present studio was built on the site of the original "Happy" garden studio.

There is now a spacious sound-stage, equipped with all the paraphernalia of up-to-date talkie-making. Dressing-rooms, scenery-docks, carpenter's shops, private theatre, and sound-apparatus are all modern and well-fitted. Most of the more important independent companies have rented the studio for their productions in the past few years and some fine films have come out of Walton.

But the visitor to the studio will notice a strange link with the past in the midst of all the prevailing modernity. In one of the offices, adjoining the floor, and actually the kitchen of Hepworth's old house, there is a wall bearing a row of wooden pegs.

Those pegs bore the strips of Hepworth's film, as it hung to dry, in 1898.

Wembley

Associated Sound Film Industries, Ltd., Raglan Gardens, Middlesex.

In October, 1929, the studios of British Talking Pictures, which stood on the verge of what had once been the Wembley Exhibition, were completely destroyed by fire. Before the end of the year a new studio had already begun to rise from the ashes of the old and finally took shape as the Wembley headquarters of Associated Sound Film Industries, Ltd., generally known as "Wembley Studio."

It is a finely-designed studio, constructed primarily for one production at a time, with approximately 10,000 square feet of floor-space available for working. It is well-equipped, has a pleasant and efficiently-run restaurant, and is one of the British studios most easily accessible to Londoners. Among equipment Wembley possesses a blessing denied to other British film-centres. It is known as the "Overhead Gantry Wiring System," which means, simply, that all the myriad studio-cables—camera, sound, lighting, and so on—are let down, when wanted, from fittings in an overhead gallery, or gantry. The worker at Wembley, therefore, is spared the commonest of all studio-mishaps, namely, falling headlong over a cable untidily sprawling on the floor. The system was designed by Mr. A. T. Jones, the Wembley Studio-Manager, who had been working on the idea for years but had to wait until he could instal overhead gantry-wires in a studio specially constructed to allow for this system.

A.S.F.I. themselves have produced two well-known films at their studio, City of Song and The Bells; but the studio is much in demand among independent companies, who rent it for their productions from time to time. Sterling Films, for instance, made at Wembley The First Mrs. Fraser, directed by Sinclair Hill. This film is said to include the largest ballroom scene ever built in a British studio. Alexander Korda there directed the first London Film Productions' picture, Wedding Rehearsal.

Wembley was the scene of Adolphe Menjou's first British film, when Eric Hakim's production of Two White Arms was made.

Continental

Joinville (France)

Paramount (French) Studios. Joinville, St. Maurice, near Paris, France.

Picture a large stretch of countryside, complete with lazy little streams meandering through the sleepy meadows, where cows graze contentedly; near by a big river, carrying picturesque barges. Imagine all the attendant noises of farm and river life, intermingling with filmland sounds. You have Joinville, Paramount's French studio, near Paris.

They do not need to build "sets" at Joinville, with so much that is picturesque ready-made. So much so, in fact, that a flock of sheep strayed in one day, and were promptly pressed into service as "extras." In the grounds there is a wonderful bit of greensward and some fine old trees, giving an old-world atmosphere as you enter this city of make-believe. Yet almost at the door is a railway-bridge—which reminds you that Joinville is a mere half-hour's run from Paris.

Not more than three years ago the Joinville studios were opened. Already they have a long list of French successes to their credit, as well as literally dozens of foreign versions, made in seven other European languages. Almost every Continental artiste of note has worked at the Paramount studio and such a cosmopolitan gathering has given an air of camaraderie and individuality to the studio.

The French stars, themselves, have a style in their dressing-rooms in much the same way as French fashions have their own particular stamp; there is a chic which engages the eye.

Work at Joinville starts early, stops late, and is broken only by a very short luncheon interval. The presiding god of the studio is Robert T. Kane who arranges all those little details that ensure smooth production in a country where so many stage-stars are film-stars as well.
Screen work must not clash with theatrical appearances and Mr. Kane sees to it that it does not. He rules the destinies of his people with a smiling grace that endears him to all the inhabitants of his little city.

Rasunda Studio (Sweden)
Svensk Filmindustri Centrum, Stockholm.

TWENTY minutes by tramway-car from the centre of Stockholm lies the Rasunda studio of Svensk Filmindustri. Even were it remarkable for nothing else, Rasunda Studio would be given a place in history, for it was here that Greta Garbo played her first leading part, in The Atonement of Gosta Berling. A Swedish cameraman at Rasunda first drew that amazing personality on to celluloid.

Apart from Rasunda's association with the great Garbo, the Svensk Filmindustri studio has a long and honourable history. Standing in a belt of trees within a stone's throw of the sea, Rasunda has been the birth-place of a number of films remarkable for their artistry and thoroughness. It is characteristic of the Swede to be efficient without ostentation, and these big studios, built in the style of a Swedish country estate, are staffed by men who are wrapped up in the art of film-making, and who are encouraged by the directors of the company to develop their individual ideas. Thus the studio has an "pleasantly " family " atmosphere not usually found in film-centres.

Sound is recorded by a special system designed and developed in the studio, giving very smooth and pure reproduction. Svensk Filmindustri—or "Swedish Biograph," as they are commonly known throughout Europe—produce an average of 12 talkies a year. They have lately taken up the production of Swedish versions of British films. The studio, moreover, is not unknown to British players, for Elissa Landi, Matheson Lang, and Miles Mander went over there to make a film.

Closely in touch with the Rasunda studio is the Svensk Filmindustri distribution organization, which controls a number of Swedish theatres. Here is one of the most remarkable cinema services in the world. The Stockholm filmgoer who wishes to book a seat at a Svensk cinema has only to lift his telephone, ask for "S.F. Tickets," and he is immediately connected with the company's private exchange. They inform him at once whether any seats are available and if so, their position. Furthermore, the "S.F." operator will add any information which may be required as to the stars appearing in the picture, the times of showing, or even the contents of the newsreel for that particular week.

Neubabelsberg (Germany)
Universum Films (U.F.A.), Neubabelsberg Studios, near Berlin.

Of all European film studios, the U.F.A. film city at Neubabelsberg, near Berlin, is among the finest and most up-to-date. It has 14 separate sound-floors and 42 buildings for technical and administrative purposes. All have grown on the spot where, in 1912, there was nothing but a tiny glasshouse, dignified by the name of "film studio," which kept the rain off the company that made the first Asta Nielsen pictures.

It was not until April, 1929, that workmen, tearing down the last of the sets surviving from Metropolis, began to clear ground for the huge new U.F.A. film centre. Something magnificent grew from the barren waste. Hundreds of floodlights made an artificial day for the night-shifts and made the work ceaseless. In a few weeks four new studios had been erected—great square buildings, their bare walls uninterrupted by any windows. Ventilation is maintained mechanically. So free from outside sound are these studios that, even during a thunderstorm, no murmur reaches the ears of those working within.

The electrician’s store houses 1,500 spotlights for studio-illumination. Sixteen million feet of film a year pass through the small printing plant attached to the studios for the rushes alone. There are five private theatres, each with its own projection-room, where the day’s work can be thrown on the screen for the benefit of directors, stars and staff.

In one year 100,000 square yards of plywood are used in the Ufa workshops, and an equal quantity of linen; not to mention 40,000 square yards of planking, 600,000 feet of lathwood and moulding, 300 tons of plaster, 6,000 square feet of glass, and 1,000,000 kilowatts of electric current generated by 9 power-plants of 23,000 amperes capacity.

Grouped round the studios are rows of very modern dressing-rooms, bath-rooms, and rest-rooms. Workshops, offices, and board-rooms provide for a studio staff of 500. The property-rooms and furniture stores alone number 14 distinct apartments, containing 10,000 pieces of furniture and 8,000 costumes. There are 21 cutting-rooms.

Neubabelsberg has a unique feature in its “Nature Studio.” Ufatone Educational films are world-famous. In these Nature studios, time-switch cameras (worked by no human hand), with microscopic and telescopic lenses, and special temperature-controlling apparatus, have all gone to the making of films which have brought fame to animal—and even microbe—actors.

All this sounds exceedingly statistical. What of the human element? At no studio is the spirit of co-operation more evident than at Neubabelsberg. In the big canteens of the studio you will see blue-overalled electricians lunching with daintily-dressed extra-girls, carpenters taking coffee with firemen, real and make-believe, and stars and their directors discussing difficult points of production.

There are 800 workmen employed in and about the studios, and they all speak with the warmest praise of the conditions in which they work at the U.F A. headquarters.

THE AMATEUR CINEMA

There is in Britain a large group of film enthusiasts who are actively engaged as amateurs in the production of ambitious films. In this section their work is fully described, and a complete list of the Amateur Cinema Clubs of Great Britain is added.

by REGINALD BRUCE BARTLETT

Marvelous work is being performed in the realms of cinematography by that devoted army of enthusiasts who make up the Amateur Cinema.

Before reviewing what is being done outside the field of professional production, let us glance briefly at the general position of cinematography in the scheme of things, with an understanding of the parallel developments of stage and screen, professional and amateur.

The cinema is the most popular amusement of to-day. The “flicker photography,” laughingly dismissed by theatrical wiseacres a few years ago, now draws its audiences of many millions every day, all over the world. Theatre managers are busily striving to stay the ebbing tide of public support. The brightest stars of the “legitimate” stage are blessing their fortune if they are able to get film contracts.

The cinema, then, has seized the public imagination as an amusement form. Will it ever be anything else?

Just as the age-old technique of the theatre is something greater than a popular form of amusement, and always will be while Shakespeares and Shaws are produced, so the modern art of the cinema will eventually be adequately expressed by men of inspired imagination.

Now what has this preamble to do with the Amateur Cinema? Just this—that, whereas amateur dramatic companies are content to carry on their excellent work in the wake of the professionals, many amateur cinematographers are endeavouring to work, not merely level with, but ahead of their professional brethren.

Amateur cinematographers were heard of very soon after professional production began in earnest. There were a few isolated experimenters who worked with such standard professional equipment as they could pick up. Special sub-standard equipment was introduced for their needs as their number grew; and individuals gravitated inevitably to production groups. In other words, they formed amateur film clubs.

To-day there are well over 200,000 active enthusiasts in this country alone and scarcely a week passes without its report of the formation of a new club. Each club maintains its self-contained production unit or units and adequate film plays are regularly produced. It might be imagined that the lure of seeing themselves upon the silver screen was the chief attraction to the majority of recruits to the movement, but this is not so. Most of the real enthusiasts are technicians!

Amateur cinematographers may be divided into two classes—the organized club members who produce their story films in the professional tradition; and the lone workers who plough the solitary furrow of completely individual production.

A well-run film club utilizes all the resources of the cinema, and its members are not only responsible for the complete production of the film but also for its presentation. A handful of enthusiasts will transform their club-room into a well-equipped studio for production and again into an adequate little projection cinema for presentation; their library will be stocked with the latest books on filmcraft; and their general technical knowledge and artistic appreciation of things cinematic will be staggeringly complete.

The growth and popularity of amateur cinematography owes much to the assistance and co-operation of the trade. Without specialized sub-standard film and apparatus, cinematography would be a prohibitive hobby for all but the most affluent. The "standard" professional film, which we see projected upon the screen at the cinemas, is 35 millimetres in width. Amateurs have the choice of four sub-standard sizes of celluloid: the most popular in this country are 16 mm. and 9.5 mm. Particular attention has been paid to the quality of sub-standard film of late, and beautiful results have been obtained with the modern panchromatic emulsions. Necessary equipment costs and running expenses, although on the heavy side in these days of depression, are by no means a serious problem to a well-organized club, whose members naturally share the burden of expense. There are now signs of a definite tendency towards cheaper amateur cinematography. A British firm has introduced a thoroughly reliable 9.5 mm. cine-camera at the price of £2 10s. and a considerable reduction in the price of a new quality panchromatic film is announced.

Adequate studio lighting equipment has always been a problem, but amateur technicians have been extraordinarily resourceful in overcoming obstacles. Remarkable ingenuity is also displayed by amateur art directors in the design and construction of settings. Castle and cottage, train and taxi, salon and saloon bar have been made from the simplest materials. And, as happens so often in artistic spheres, the very limitations and restrictions imposed upon amateur cinematographers are undoubtedly helping to develop a new technique of symbolic background treatment which will in time influence the professional cinema.

Shakespeare painted his own backgrounds, and advanced amateur cinematographers are beginning to grasp the artistic possibilities of the scrapping of elaborate background photography. A fine example of modern simple treatment is to be seen in Night Scene, by Geoffrey Collyer and Horace R. Hughes, of Ace Movies, Streatham, London. This brilliant little film crystallizes the modern movement in amateur cinematography.

Nor does the Amateur Cinema lack its screen personalities, although as yet it misses that universal recognition which sets the seal upon acting fame. Yet there is undoubtedly room for much talent to be developed. It is my contention that the director is all-important in stamping his personality upon the actor. A few remarkable instances of celebrated stars' exhibitions of electric brilliance under one particular director, with corresponding dullness when differently "handled," will occur to most of us. These support my theory. Now surely there must far more frequently be a sympathy and friendly understanding between director and director in the intimate atmosphere of the amateur film club that should encourage this all-important personality factor; these Sternberg - Dietrich and Lubitsch - Chevalier partnerships are nurtured in the kindly soul of close friendship.

"Lone Workers"

 Outstanding examples of individual work are being shown by the great army of "lone workers." Obviously the more elaborate story-film production of the big clubs is denied them; but here again the limitations provide definite channels for expression of individual genius. Amateurs have produced many Nature studies that rival the best efforts of professionals. Two recent gems of this class are Glimpses of Nature—produced by A. G. Phillips, a lone worker attached to the Finchley A.C.S.—and J. D. Ridley's Breaking Through, a beautiful, fairy-like little study of growing plant life and unfolding flowers. Another enthusiast, F. P Barnitt, of Tunbridge Wells, is producing Windmills of the Weald. To secure adequate shots of the picturesque but all-too-infrequent mills at work, he recently travelled an average of seventy miles a day for five days. He is also getting excellent results from experiments with microcinematography, in which microscope and cine-camera are collaborating to secure moving pictures of minute organisms.

The question of some form of national organization has always exercised the minds of amateur cinematographers, and recently two associations were formed, representing the slightly diverging points of view of their sponsors.

The British Association of Amateur Cinematographers was the first body to be formed, with Sinclair Hill, the distinguished professional director, who has long been interested in amateur cinematography, as President. Geoffrey Collyer, the brilliant young amateur director of Night Scene, is Hon. General Secretary, and his friend and collaborator, Horace R. Hughes, who has lately been astonishing the film world with the brilliance of his photography, is Technical Director. H. H. Head, who has been instrumental in successfully running an annual amateur film contest, is Chairman of the B.A.A.C., the headquarters of which are at 11, Soho Square, W.1. The aims of the Association are to represent amateur cinematographers generally in this and other countries; to provide for contracts and working associations with the professional cinema; to produce and issue moving pictures and sound records on educational lines; and generally to promote the interests of amateur cinematographers.

The Institute of Amateur Cinematographers of the British Empire, formed shortly afterwards, with somewhat similar ideals, is devoting special attention to the individual amateur cinematographer, as distinct from the club member. The Chairman is George H. Sewell, F.I.A.C., the author of Film Play Production for Amateurs, and a man whose name is a household word in amateur cinematographic circles. A film which he made on standard stock, entitled Smoke, was recently presented at the Tatler News Theatre, Charing Cross Road, London. W. E. Chadwick, F.I.A.C., an enthusiastic amateur and keen businessman, is Hon. General Secretary, and he has very efficiently publicized the new Institute, the headquarters of which are at 7, Red Lion Square, London. W.C.1.

Both societies provide for the publication of technical bulletins and for the organization of competitions and exhibitions. Other very useful moves which they are making include the provision of central clearing-houses for the exchange of amateur films and an attempt to improve the hampering customs regulations which have done much to arrest effective international exchange of films.

Many important developments are foreshadowed by announcements of these two national associations. There is much to hope for in the projected competitions and exhibitions. The I.A.C. announces a scenario competition and, if it succeeds in unearthing but one brilliant scenario writer, it will have deserved well of the movement.

Film competitions must also bring out the finest creative work, and it is essential that adequate public exhibition of the winning films be staged. We may not be far from the long-cherished ideal of a theatre for the regular public presentation of amateur films.

One very important development of the amateur cinema of the future may be the organized production on a large scale of educational films. Already Governments are considering the question of national educational cinematography; but this is a side of the industry that does not spell "box-office" and the problem might well be left to the amateurs, who are well qualified for this type of production. In the United States, indeed, amateurs regularly produce films for medical, civic, welfare, and general educational purposes.

The question of sound must bulk largely in the future. Practicable sub-standard sound-on-film will certainly be universal at some not too distant date, when prices have been suitably adjusted.

Science and Art march on hand in hand; the world of cinematography seethes with experiment; and more and more to be identified with its progress and emancipation from the crude vulgarities of early days, more and more to share in its discoveries and successes, is its at present scarcely recognized auxiliary, the Amateur Cinema.

The following section is devoted to a full and exhaustive study of the life of a talking picture, from the moment of its inception in the scenario form to the final moment when it is flashed on to the screen for its first public showing. Each stage is described by a recognized expert, and no more authoritative study of the talking picture's progress has ever been published.
THE SCENARIO

The film in its beginning. A scenario writer with British and American experience describes his craft.

by J. P. CARSTAIRS

The scenario of a film is the actual film, written out in terms of the screen. It is the director's guide book. It is, in fact, the book of the picture about to be translated on to celluloid; the finished product on paper. But how is a scenario built? It starts in this manner.

An original screen story, or a novel, or a play, is about to be filmed. It is, primarily, condensed into synopsis form. That is, it is shorn of all its trimmings and only the barest outline remains. Then the adaptation work begins. The book or play or story is altered until it is suitable for the screen. Many people wonder why it is that the filmed version of a book or a play never appears on the screen in the same way as the original subject. There are usually many reasons for this.

Often a subject has many facets that are not suitable for translation on to the screen. There are scenes which would be dull or uninteresting; chapters that help a novel, though they have little to do with the development of the plot. The film cannot admit such elaborations, owing to the fact that there are only seventy minutes in which the drama can be told. Moreover, quite a lot of book or play material does not "register" in a picture.

Again, additional characters are sometimes added, in order to get more humour or drama into a subject, or scenes are required with more punch, or maybe a story, in which the man's part was originally designed to be the chief role, has to be altered to suit the charms of Miss Apple Pye, because she is the company's new star and must be starred.

Again, the cost of a certain episode may make it impossible for filming. Imagine an important chapter in a story, or in an original screen play, describing the Derby. It may, on the screen, be presented as a description through a loud-speaker. The reason is probably that Mr. Benjamin Tornoff, the eminent producer, refused to spend the money to go out and film the whole of the Derby, and all the atmosphere that goes with it. He has used, instead, the cheaper "talkie" device of "hearing it on the wireless." Indeed, there are a host of reasons for alterations in plays and stories for the films.

When the adaptation is complete in short story form, still shorn of any sort of trimming and fancy writing, it is turned over to a writer, or group of writers, to deliver screen Treatments of it. The Treatment is a fuller adaptation written more in terms of the screen. For example, whereas in the adaptation of the story the writer would say "a love scene is played in the garden," in the Treatment he would elaborate this and visualize it on the screen. It would become "a romantic love scene, with some good, modern dialogue is played in the garden. The sound of the orchestra is heard off-screen and other couples are seen passing across the background."

Meanwhile the director, camera-man, and art director have been in close consultation with the writers. When all the Treatments are completed they are pooled and the best from each is taken and blended into one final script. Thus the cream from all the writers' material is taken for the Final Treatment. This method is very much used at the Paramount and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in Hollywood, and at the Gaumont studio at Shepherd's Bush. Some studios have as many as seven writers working on the story of one picture; at other times they may employ only one or two. It depends on the nature of the story and the writers' ability. When Paramount were preparing Horse Feathers for the Four Marx Brothers, there were as many as fourteen writers, including the best "gag men" in Hollywood. A gag man, incidentally, is one who thinks up comedy "business"; he prefers to be called a "comedy constructionist."

The Final Treatment is written and delivered to the director, who in turn gets an "O.K." on it from the producer or production supervisor. Then, when official approval has been given, work goes ahead and the Sequences are added. The Sequences are the natural time lapses or separate parts of the story. They are very much like chapters in a book or acts in a play. Each Sequence ends with a screen curtain—called a Fade Out.

The scenario writer has to be careful that his script does not contain too many Sequences, as this tends to make his Treatment episodic—like too many scenes in a play. Every Sequence has to end with a climax; it has to build up to something and should have a "punch" before the Fade Out. This is often called, in film jargon, a High Spot. Take, for example, a comedy in which all sorts of things have gone wrong for the poor little husband. Imagine that he has got into severe trouble at home by dropping the favourite vase and putting his elbow through the drawing-room window. The climax or High Spot is probably reached when he throws a brick at a cat that wanders in, but instead he hits his mother-in-law as she enters on an unexpected visit. This would be the place for the end of the Sequence, the Fade Out.

Continuity.

After the Treatment follows the Continuity. The Continuity is the "breaking down" of the Final Treatment into actual Shots, expressing the movement of the camera and describing the various devices to deliver the action before the camera's eye. In addition, the job of continuity-writing includes the necessity of holding the story to the right track, keeping the threads together, and the tempo swift and smooth. This, in addition to writing the latest in camera tricks and technical methods of "splicing" the story, makes continuity-writing a very specialized form of screen writing, and an important branch of Scenario work.

There are specialists in this, just as there are in Adaptations, Dialogue, Screen Plays, Gags, and Treatments. Bess Meredyth is the highest-paid continuity-writer in the world; just as famous are Frances Marion, who writes original screen stories such as Emma and The Champ, and Harry Hervey, who was responsible for Devil and the Deep and Shanghai Express.

Nearly all scenario writers of to-day have been in the film world for years. Some of the most famous are S. J. Perelman, Howard Estabrook, Grover Jones, Ernest Vadja, Richard Schayer, Tim Whelan, George Marion Junior, and Sam Mintz. Watch for their names on the credit titles next time you go to a cinema.

When the Continuity-writer has finished his share of making the script, the work is completed and the finished product is called a Scenario. The average scenario has about five hundred separate Shots—that is, five hundred separate scenes that are all filmed from different angles. Watching the screen, one is not conscious of all these changes, but they are occurring all the time. Just when a Shot should be changed or a certain angle used, is a matter of common sense and knowledge of film technique, acquired only by long experience.

For example, when Mr. Stan Laurel slips up and falls into a nice big custard pie, we should use a medium long shot as he falls into the pie and then a close-up of him after he has fallen into it—to get his re-action. This would appear in the scenario as a separate shot.

Let us take a few scenes from the Radio picture, The Lost Squadron. It is an excellent example, containing much of both dialogue and action—i.e., sound and camera work. It is the story of a thrill-mad motion picture director (played by Erich Von Stroheim). The scene described in this excerpt from the script is one in which the stunt-mad director watches unmoved as one of his pilots whirls into a spin that means a real crash instead of a faked one. The director, concentrated wholly upon his desire for thrills, cold-bloodedly orders the scene to be filmed, caring nothing for the pilot’s peril. Richard Dix, as Gibson, the pilot, is in the ’plane that is out of control. This is how the scenario reads:

Scene 37. Sequence E. Long Shot. Exterior. Aerodrome Day.

Gibson is in the ’plane. The ’plane spinning dizzily towards the ground.

Scene 38. Medium Long Shot. Exterior. Aerodrome Day.

Von Furst (Erich Von Stroheim) is near the cameras in the scene. The cameramen watch the ’plane anxiously, and look at the director. Von Furst removes his coat as he watches Gibson.

Sound of Gibson’s ’plane heard off screen.

Von: Keep up the action—never mind the ’plane. Let him crash!

Here in the scenario we get a shot of the aeroplane; then the people’s re-action below, when they realize that the plane is out of control; and then the stunt-mad director giving orders for the continuation of the scene. In the Scenario, as quoted, the scenes are numbered and the Sequence given.

The word Exterior denotes that the Shot is taken in the open; the word Day is used to denote the time the episode is taking place. If it were evening the word Night would be substituted and the lighting altered. Some American scenario-writers spell night “nite!”
Later The Lost Squadron Scenario, continuing the same incident, reads

Scene 46. Exterior. Santa Monica Day.
Medium Close Shot.
Gibson in the 'plane. The ‘plane diving towards the sea.

Medium Long Shot.
The ‘plane crashes into the sea.

Scene 48. Exterior. Santa Monica Day.
A Car. Medium Long Shot.
The Pest (Dorothy Jordan) in the car as she sees the ‘plane crash into the water, and reacts horrified.

Scene 49. Exterior. Santa Monica Ocean Day.
Medium Long Shot.
A speed boat rushing to the rescue, the camera pans right with it as it skims along the water.

Sound: Boat’s syren.

Medium Shot.
Gibson crawls from the wrecked ‘plane.

Thus, in the scenario, there is quick movement and the necessary breaking-up of the scenes to get the story over. The various terms, such as medium long shot, are used to denote the distance from the camera. When a camera follows a moving object by swivelling sideways or up or down, it is called Panning. When the camera itself moves, it is known as Trucking or Tracking.

An example of the Fade Out or the end of a Sequence is given in the scenario of Mata Hari, M.G.M.'s Greta Garbo—Ramon Navarro film. It reads:

Medium Close Shot.

Mata Hari listens calmly to these words, but she hears their meaning as we Prosecuting Attorney (off): And you shot him in an attempt to save yourself. But it has not saved you, Mata Hari! You stand proven an enemy of France!

FADE OUT.

Thus the episode is brought to a close when the High Spot has been reached.

Most scenarios are written with the action and directions on the left, and the dialogue and the sound effects on the right, although another method is to place the dialogue in the centre of the page. Sound effects are usually written in when there is a special meaning or significance for their being there. The ordinary sound effects are taken for granted these days. This point is instanced in the excerpt from The Lost Squadron above.

Now suppose you had an idea for a screen story. How should you go about it?
First of all study the medium. Watch the pictures at your cinema carefully. Try to visualize your own story on the screen. Be hard on yourself and eliminate all uninteresting material. If you think you have an original plot write it simply as a short story. Do not try putting close-ups and so on into it yet. Write the story simply and straightforwardly. If you feel capable, write it in a Treatment form—that is, putting in the Sequences and indicating the method in which you think the story should be played for the films. It is usually too difficult to write the story in full scenario form at first. Besides, producers prefer to read a Synopsis or Treatment before going into the advanced stages of Continuity and scenario work.

Should the story be accepted, it would then go to a competent screen writer for alteration and for Continuity work. He would work with the director on this, and later the art director and the cameraman would be consulted about "sets," "shots," camera angles, and other such technicalities that help to give a picture the right atmosphere and production polish. Should you yourself continue to work on the Treatment, you would endeavour to give it snap and speed, and you should remember that every shot of your scenario should mean something. There is no room for waste in film writing.

In short, the best way to learn to write for the screen is by easy stages. Write your short story first. Then practise putting it into the barest outline; then adapt it; then give it a screen Treatment. You would be well advised not to try writing Continuity and screen angles. These are the work of experts. But, lest one day you should wish to be such an expert, always watch the pictures for the latest in tricks. Notice when they use a close-up and when they use a long shot. Try to "think in terms of pictures," and, who knows?—to-morrow you may be writing screen stories like The Champ or adaptations like The Calendar or Grand Hotel.
Casting

The next phase. Most trying of all film jobs; the casting director's task fully explained.

by Nathalie Bucknall

During the assembling of the cast for Ramon Novarro's Son of India, the producer, Director Jacques Feyder, Novarro, and the others who were gathered "in conference," were faced with one rôle that it seemed impossible to fill. While Feyder was new to Hollywood, the others felt that they knew everyone who had ever appeared on the screen—and they could think of no one.

The rôle was of an Hindu ascetic, one of the most important parts in the picture. He must look the part physically without too obvious a make-up. He must have a recognizably spiritual quality to his face, manner and voice. He must look very frail, but must be actually physically strong. And, above all, he must have had both stage and screen experience. For the rôle was extremely important and he would be called upon to express subtle nuances in both pantomime and with spoken word.

So desperate did the situation become that there was some talk of rewriting the rôle to make it less exacting. Before doing this, however, one of the casting directors was called in as a final resort.

On the spot, and from memory, he gave them the name of the very man they wanted (Nigel de Brulier, famous for his "Richelieu" in Douglas Fairbanks' The Three Musketeers) though that actor had not appeared in a single picture in the last five years!

And the average casting director in the average studio performs a feat comparable to that about one hundred times a day! Instantly, from memory, he can give you the names of two thousand people, physical descriptions of each and at least two pictures in which each has appeared! If he could not—he would not hold his job!

That is no exaggeration. Though he has a most extensive filing system, listing some ten to fifteen thousand persons available for work in pictures, the pressure and speed required are such that it would take him at least a week to do a day's work if he should consult his files for each request.

In the first place, the calls are not spread evenly through the day. Usually, a director does not know until the late afternoon what his requirements will be for the next day's work. The great majority of the calls, therefore, bunch themselves in the last hours of the day.

At a quarter to five, let us say, an assistant-director will telephone that such-and-such a director expects to reach the accident sequence tomorrow, and will require: "'Fifty ' walk-throughs,' New York slums, hot
“an afternoon”; “policeman, big Irishman, good-natured and able to get a laugh”; “toothless hag to shake fist at car”; “a couple of Italian and Jewish vendor types”; “ambulance doctor, young student type, keen, scientific, good actor, and able to speak lines.”

Except for the fifty “walk-throughs,” who will simply pass back and forth through the background and who must be well mixed in age and type, the casting director must suggest, from memory, at least two people (in case one is working at another studio) for each of the other parts. And, in addition to giving a short physical description of each one, he is expected to name two or more pictures in which this actor has appeared, so that the assistant-director can refresh his memory.

In other words, the casting director is supposed to present his wares in such a manner that the assistant can approve or veto each one in the course of that one telephone conversation!

And many times, of course, the requests are far more difficult than that. Quite apart from the “freak” calls for snake-charmers, human skeletons, bearded ladies, men who can imitate a coyote, yodellers, “man with experience as hind legs of imitation lion,” and so on, there are everyday requests for particularly mixed groups for ballroom scenes, where each one of the actors or actresses will have to speak a line or do a bit of “business”; or a typical group of soldiers, who can drill and know the manual of arms; or aviators, horsemen, chauffeurs, barbers, swimmers, and the like.

Calls that are by no means in the “freak” class, but everyday occurrences, include such unexpected requests as: “A pretty blonde with a high baby voice who can get a laugh”; “a cross-eyed woman, must be six feet tall”; “an ex-convict, who knows how to sing”; “a tall brunette, good at polo”; “big, mild-mannered man with a squeaky voice”; “female impersonator, experienced at parachute jumping”—and so on, through an endless list, each one of which seems almost impossible at first glance.

Yet—except for the instant placing of the individual in the memory—it is really not quite as difficult as it might appear. For it veritably seems that every condition and class of person has come to Hollywood with the fond dream of making a success in pictures. Nor is it only the beautiful who are hopeful. The moral that can be read from the success of such players as Polly Moran and the late Louis Wolheim has not been wasted. There is, therefore, a tremendous reservoir of assorted humanity from which the casting director can choose almost any conceivable type he wants.

He is the liaison between the outside world of aspirants and the inside world of studio requirements. As such, he is often looked upon as a miracle-worker. If only one can “get on the good side of him,” as the saying is, is he not in a position to clear one’s road to stardom and electric lights?

He is not!

And therein lies the greatest hardship of his work. He is in the position of a famine-relief worker who has food for thousands where millions are in want. But for drastic restrictions brought about by the studios themselves, there would be in Hollywood something between half a million and a million hopeful actors continually struggling for seven hundred jobs! As it is, with only one applicant in twenty registered by the Central Casting Bureau (a sort of "clearing house" of humanity, maintained jointly by all the studios), there are seventeen thousand people for those seven hundred jobs.

Admittedly, times are worse now than they have ever been. But even in the "boom" year of 1929, only five hundred and forty-five of those seventeen thousand extras averaged one day or more of work a week. Which means that if they had to depend on their movie income they would have to live on a weekly wage of less than two pounds—pitifully inadequate in such a high-priced city as Hollywood.

And they are the fortunate three per cent! The aristocrats of the profession! Of the remaining sixteen thousand five hundred, some work as infrequently as once or twice a year!

In normal times, that is.

In 1931, for which the latest statistics are available, it was even worse. Only four hundred and one persons averaged two days' work a week or more. And of these, only one hundred and fifty-five doubled the one-day ration, only fifty-five made three days a week, seven worked four, and only one achieved the full five-day week which most of labour looks forward to as an ideal minimum!

Competition

Nor is this the full tale of woe, from the standpoint of the "regular." For in the last year many "outsiders" have taken up the scramble for the stray crumbs from the movie banquet. These, usually, fall into one of two major classes. Paupers, whose cases are pressed by one or other of the charitable organizations of the city; and unemployed studio technicians, who must be kept alive somehow until such time as they are needed again in their regular positions. In most studios, these last are given first preference for all work that does not require actual acting ability.

With such conditions, it is obvious that the pressure brought to bear on a casting director to show favouritism is tremendous. Yet he is not in a position to do so. The actual choice is almost invariably made by the director or his assistant. Except in the case of those who simply walk through the background, the casting department has little leeway.

Yet the competition for even these, the meanest of all jobs in picture work, is incredibly keen.

The average casting department receives more than a hundred letters a day—begging, threatening, and pleading for work. One will tell a heart-rending tale (perhaps true, perhaps not) of a mother on her deathbed who could be saved by some operation. Another will argue that he cannot answer calls when needed if he does not get enough work to buy new tyres for his automobile. Another will recall the time when he was an assistant-director and did a favour for the casting man. Many of the arguments and pleas are extremely ingenious, some are amusing—and not a few are tragic. And the hardest part of all for the human being who holds the job is the fact that he knows almost all these people personally!

There is also, of course, a reverse side of the same shield. Accusations of favouritism are as numerous as pleas for it; and fully as extreme in the lengths to which they will go. One studio casting department was raided by government agents recently as the suspected headquarters of a narcotic smuggling ring! When the suspicion was discovered to be utterly unfounded, further investigation revealed that the charge had been made by a disgruntled extra who felt that he had been badly treated.

There are times, almost, when a casting director is almost in danger of losing his life!

Yes, there is a seamy side to Hollywood, and no one deplores it more, nor fights more strongly to eradicate it than those who are in authority.

Cross Section of Humanity.

But to return to the more usual work of this department. It is a fascinating pastime to run through the files. One gets, as it were, a cross-section of the whole of humanity, unexpected glimpses of human characteristics, filed away on cards like so many items in a merchant's stock.

Of the five thousand extras who work most frequently, eighty per cent belong to one or other of forty-two major groupings, which are as follows: Dress Men (those who can furnish their own clothes for almost anything but actual "costume" pictures), Juveniles, Bell Boys, Bald Men, Comics, Police, Collegians, Butlers, Freaks, Tall Men, Short Men, Fat Men, "Stunt" Men (who will do anything from parachute jumping to running through a burning building), Horsemen, "Beards" (a classification that is self-explanatory), Narcotic Addicts, Military Men, Character Men (men with distinctive individuality), Ruffians, Judges, Dress Women, Pretty Girls, Ugly Girls, Stenographers, Tall Women, Short Women, Fat Women, Women Comics, Hags, Underworld Women, Stunt Women, Maids, Character Women, Horsewomen, Dowagers, Negroes, Hawaiians, Orientals, Latins, Nordics and Slavs.

Each of these classes is divided into sub-classes, such as: "Pretty Girl—blue-eyed blonde"; and each card carries information regarding name, address, telephone, weekly wage, age, height, appearance, eyes, carriage, wardrobe, experience, pictures worked in, colouring, special abilities (such as riding or swimming), and photographs (See plate 62).

But the most interesting items of all are the comments that are sometimes added. Under "Beards," for instance, we come upon the card of "W. Norman—beard grows very fast, can develop a heavy stubble overnight." Under "Character Woman," Mary Gordon is tagged as "very Scotch." Mildred Hardy, fifty, five feet seven inches, weight eleven stone eight pounds, is listed as an excellent "mother or landlady." Emmet Bock is an expert as a "drunkard"; Alex Melesh as a "bald Russian waiter"; and Jimmy Phillips has been most successful as a "thief." After Tom Kerrigan's name appears the one significant word "bumps," which means that Mr. Kerrigan is gifted with the ability to take rough falls without getting hurt.

One could spend not hours, but days, going through one of these files, and could find a fresh interest to the last.

It is not so surprising, after all, that a movie studio is able to get any kind of person it wants for any part. With a "cross-section of the world" to draw from, they should not experience difficulties until they attempt to make a story laid in Mars. But even then something will be invented; some mechanical, robot-like creature, as was done during the filming of the Mysterious Island by M.G.M., when the casting director had to produce (or invent) under-water creatures, and when it was done by having all available dwarfs wear marvellously constructed, fantastic rubber garments, with curiously shaped helmets. They certainly looked the part of strange, lilliputian, under-sea inhabitants. Isn’t it said that "necessity is the mother of invention"?

But, in addition to actors, the casting director is often called upon to furnish other people needed in one way or another for picture-making. Except for the regular employees in the regular departments, most of the people required for any purpose are secured through the casting office. A motor-cycle policeman may be needed, for instance, to hold back the spectators who invariably gather around while a company is "on location." Or, again, a call was made for "thirty experienced cowboys and packers" to act in that capacity with the company that planned to penetrate the Grand Canyon on horseback. Or, instead of human beings, the call may be for animals or birds.

One of the standard needs is for people resembling some star in general physical build to "double" for him in dangerous scenes. When one remembers that in one picture the star may have to jump from an aeroplane, in the next fall off a horse, and in the third swim for shore from a capsized boat, it is readily seen that several such doubles may be needed for each star. It is the duty of the casting office to have always on hand at least one who knows how to "lick" any situation that a writer can imagine. The reason for "doubles," incidentally, is not because of any cowardice on the part of the featured players. In the old days, many stars insisted that they play all scenes themselves. The resultant time spent in hospitals, however, was too costly, and the studios put an end to it. Nowadays, you can be pretty sure that a "double" plays any really dangerous scene, regardless of any publicity to the contrary.

All in all, a casting director must be a sort of miner of human beings. He must be able to "dig up" an actor to fill any part that is within the realm of imagination. And, most important of all, according to his own testimony, is the "psychological" aspect of the work. For it is not enough simply to get the almost impossible human being to whom has been given the added ability to act. You must be sure that he is temperamentally fitted to work well with the particular director and assistant to whom he will be assigned. Many actors will give fine work for one director, mediocre for another, and downright bad for a third. A steady-going, dependable actor will not go well, for instance, with a director who is known to go "off the handle." A highly-strung, brilliant actress, on the other hand, is quite apt to have a fit of temperament if she is assigned to a director of a more phlegmatic turn. In no instance is it the fault of any of them. But in every instance it keeps the casting director busy.

Film Directing

Direction—the be-all (and end-all sometimes) of film production. One of the most famous directors writes on his work, which has reached considerable success in Paramount productions.

by Ernst Lubitsch

I AM constantly asked: "How do you decide on those touches that stamp a film? Do you think of them as you go along? Do the players sometimes insert them? Or are they all decided before the production is started?"

When I have answered and settled those little problems I shall have given you a very good idea of my side of this wonderful business of making pictures.

For it is a wonderful business; a fascinating, romantic profession that becomes more and more intriguing with each film.

Always one must be thinking of fresh ideas; new ways to keep an audience interested; different methods of conveying a meaning to them. In the Maurice Chevalier picture One Hour With You, I allowed Maurice to take the audience into his confidence, by facing them and, in a typical Chevalier manner, blandly ask what he shall do next! At the beginning of the film, too, he tells the audience that, contrary to their belief, he really is married. There you get a different touch that all directors strive to insert into their films.

How is that "different" touch found?

I am given a story. Let us say, for example, as I have already mentioned Chevalier, that it is to have Maurice and Jeanette MacDonald as the stars. With this fact before me and being in possession of the main theme of the story, I practically lock myself away from the rest of the world, with my script writer and technical staff. For two or three months we will pore over the work. Every detail is worked out. Perhaps for days I think round a particular scene. Nothing is decided hastily. After a good deal of anxiety and thought, someone perhaps hits on a happy solution. We believe we are ready for further development.

The very next week I may visualize quite differently the way that scene should be done. Back we go, retracing our steps, scrapping ideas and whole scenes, if necessary, just to fit in with this new angle. Gradually the whole production is built up. In my mind's eye I can see exactly how that film will appear on the screen. I may revolve an idea round my mind for days, thinking it out first this way and then that. Would a song be better inserted in such and such a place? Is it likely to hold up the action if it is put in?

Here is why it is essential to view the film as a whole before starting on production. The story is divided into many little scenes—each photographed separately. It is possible that scene 40 may be the first to be "shot." The 39 earlier scenes may even be kept until the very end before the camera records them. Thus, one's mind's eye must have a very clear view of the whole production if one is to tackle the problems connected with it.

Why are scenes "shot" out of order? There can be a variety of reasons: The players needed for these scenes may be engaged on another picture, they may be ill. There may be scenes that are needed away from the studio altogether; there may have been a hitch in the construction of the set through some unavoidable mishap. All sorts of accidents or delays may arise to throw the best laid plans temporarily out of gear. And all the time there is a schedule laid down which strictly limits the time allowed for the whole of the shooting. So it is that the scenes are made in what looks like the most haphazard order.

How vital it is, then, for every scene, every action, to be detailed down to the very last raising of an eyelid. If I were to go into the studio with only a hazy idea of how I was going to treat the subject, muddle and chaos would result. At least it would in my case, although different directors have different ways of working.

Sometimes, of course, even after months of labour and careful preparation, a sudden flash of inspiration when the story has started may alter things a little. It would be foolish, in these circumstances, to adhere rigidly to the fixed schedule of the story. One must have a rather "elastic" mind; be able to see how this new idea is going to affect the rest of the production. Few producers would be thanked by their companies, for instance, if, after the film was half-way through, a completely different complexion were put on the story through a flash of inspiration, and all the film was scrapped, for work to start again on the new way.

The Importance of Thoroughness

That is why I stress the importance of thoroughness. That is why I do insist on my players knowing their scenes several days before they are "shot." It is useless to expect an artiste to come on the set, give him his scene, push him in a corner to "run it over," and then imagine that he will act it as it should be acted. An artiste must be given time to know every word perfectly; to understand exactly what he has to do, and to have a chance to "get into the skin of the part." In some films you may have noticed a disjointed effect. They fail to reproduce the harmonious whole that all of us strive to obtain.

A film should appear, when it is completed, to have been "shot" from beginning to end in one complete piece. That, as you will understand, can seldom be achieved in fact; but careful preparation can give the impression of a complete whole. It would be useless for me to begin shooting on scene 35, for instance, following scene 67, if I had not a complete idea in my mind of what I wanted. Preparation, then, is everything.
That is why I spend so long on the preparation of a story and, once I have begun "shooting," am able to get that completed in eight weeks or less.

What so many people forget when they criticize the work of a film director is that he has to cater for varying tastes, all over the world. When a play is produced on the New York stage, for instance, the producer can stress certain points, introduce definite "business" which he knows will appeal to the New York audience. If he were to produce the same play in London, he might change his method drastically, because he knows that London would appreciate certain situations that a New York audience would miss; and vice versa. Imagine, then, the enormous difficulties that face a film maker. He has to produce a screen play that will appeal, not only to New York and London, but also to the Middle West towns of America, the Irish and Scottish peasants, the Australian sheep farmer and the South African business man. This will give you some slight idea of the difficulties with which a film director has to contend and why so much time and thought are necessary if a worldwide reputation is to be secured.

Sometimes, of course, scenes are made twice for different countries. I can give you an example of this. In The Smiling Lieutenant, I had all those scenes where the word "lieutenant" was pronounced "lootenant" done again for Britain, with the players saying "leftenant." That was a definite case where it was impossible to cater for both countries with the one picture. American people would have been shocked to have heard "leftenant." Britons would have laughed at "lootenant."

ART DIRECTION

An account of some of the innumerable problems which confront the man responsible for the building of film "sets"; contributed by the well-known Art Director who has worked at the A.S.F.I. studios at Wembley.

by O. F. WERNDORFF

MUCH of your entertainment in the cinema depends on the work of the Art Director. I always think of art directors that the less you hear about them the better they are. Good art direction must give you the atmosphere of the picture without being too noticeable. The best "sets," in my experience, are those which you forget as soon as the film is over and the lights go up again in the theatre. The first essential in the film is the action of the characters. The art director's job is to provide them with a background—and a background it should remain at all costs.

But have you ever thought of the man who provides you with all the realities and unrealities that you see on the screen, quite apart from the acting and dialogue? Have you ever thought of the almost unlimited imagination and experience of life which he must possess?

He must be as much at home in the luxurious palaces of the rich as in the bare and squalid houses of the slum dwellers. He has to design and build the glades and woods of the fairies as well as settings in old and forgotten periods, their furniture and their dresses. He has to create the background and the general atmosphere of modern industry, with all its machinery; and the complicated apparatus of the present and even the future, whenever author and director demand such scenes for the story and action of a picture.

All this is his business, and all this knowledge can be obtained by study. But there lies the difficulty. Film-making is a quick business and involves doing the best possible in the shortest possible time. In most cases, the art director is faced with the problem of inventing, designing, and building his sets overnight, spending a minimum of both time and money.

Of course, most difficulties, although apparently insuperable at first, are eventually overcome by much brain work, and after heart-breaking arguments with the producer, the director, and dozens of other collaborators.

There is one collaborator whom it is impossible to "get round." Pitiless, hard to please, ever critical, possessed of an eye clearer and sharper than that of any human being, the camera is the task-master for which the art director has to work. Hundreds of optical and physical principles of the camera have to be taken into consideration and everything must be arranged so that, on the screen, every detail shall look as if seen through human eyes.

Now, the human eye is even more wonderful and complicated an optical instrument than the lens of the camera. For example, if you enter a room and glance round it, you immediately, though subconsciously, get a full impression of its character. If you fix your eye on one point you never lose consciousness of the general surroundings. This is due to the construction of your eye and the speed of the process of "seeing."

The eye of the camera is different.
Art Direction

It gives you only the picture of things in its exact range and optical angle, within rigid bounds of height and width. It is here that the art director's work comes in.

There is no use for him to build super-realistic sets, with marble fireplaces and plates of real gold on the table, if he forgets even for a moment their relative photographic value in the special shot for which he is designing. Money could be saved in many productions if only producers and directors would not "go on the floor" until they had listened to the opinion of the art director, with his experience and artistically-trained eyes.

The basis of all film work is photography, and photography means—"writing with light." Therefore, the art director has to design and to build with light and for light. Every alteration of position of objects in the background, as well as the foreground, can entirely alter the whole effect of a scene in perspective. The angle chosen to photograph a piece of furniture, a room, or a person decides the character of the picture on the screen.

By altering the lines or the lighting of a scene, or even its colour, you emphasize or detract from its importance in the sequence and in the whole story.

So long as the art director remembers that the character of an interior and its furniture, the line of trees or hills in a scene, or even the design of a single vase or ornament may help to create the mood sought after in any particular picture, his problems are almost solved and he will achieve his duty. There are tricks involving models, back projection, and hundreds of other special jobs which he must study, all of them highly specialized and technical.

But you will have gathered, perhaps, from my general remarks, what I meant by saying that it is the sets of which you were never aware which are really the best. The art director's task is to prepare good "sets" for his picture; but his greatest reward is when an audience does not take particular notice of them and, most of all, when his artifice appears to them most like the real thing. He knows then that he has been successful in reproducing background and nothing more.

CAMERA WORK

The best photography is admitted to come from Germany. Here one of the most original German camera-men who in 1932 came to Britain to photograph Gloria Swanson’s first British film, “Perfect Understanding,” outlines the work he does.

by CURT COURANT

I WONDER how much the cinema public realizes what is contributed to its enjoyment by the work of the cameraman. They probably do not even notice his name when it flashes on the screen at the beginning of the film; they do not, as a rule, talk about him, as they do about the stars of the picture; certainly they know little about his work.

Yet the cameraman is really responsible for the technical perfection of the film, as well as the artistic result or final form. The cameraman, if he is not an artist, can ruin the work of the most artistic director in the world. Stars, scenery, and story can be made or marred by him.

Consider the cameraman as an artist. Try to compare his task with that of a painter or an etcher. The painter has its colours, his canvases of varying grain, his brushes of different sizes. He can put down at a moment’s notice, without restriction, all that he may see or feel. The etcher does the same with his steel pen and his copper plate.

But the cameraman works with a box of wheels and sprockets, an optical lens, and strips of celluloid coated with chemicals. The devices of colour are denied him, save rarely; and he cannot, like the painter, take palette knife or turpentine and make corrections in his work. Once he has pronounced the inexorable word “Ready!” and his camera has begun to turn, he has committed himself, for better or for worse, to the lighting, the grouping, the angles and movements which he has arranged; and the results of his artistry—or lack of it—will appear, unalterably, in the picture. I need hardly emphasize the significance of this little word “ready,” nor its power in justifying or wasting the huge expenditure on films, in setting, dressing, and salaries.

Since the change-over to talkies, the cameraman’s task has become harder. Sound must be carefully considered in its relation to camera work, and great care must be taken that sound and action are properly blended. Acoustic difficulties often necessitate the shooting of scenes in the studio, when for ideal reproduction exteriors would have been desirable. In such instances the cameraman has to reproduce as best he can the light of Nature, whether it be moonlight, sunshine, or grey haze. This he must do in such a way that the film-goer shall never suspect that the scene is not an actual exterior. Outdoor night-scenes, for instance, are almost invariably shot inside the studio, since the lighting and recording of such scenes in the open air is next to impossible.

The cameraman, too, is the deviser of tricks and technique, whereby shipwrecks, train-smashes, aeroplane, and motor-car accidents, fire, flood, and earthquake may be reproduced, in miniature or by artifice, and yet give an atmosphere of reality. Film stars are too valuable to risk their necks in dare-devil falls and climbs; and so it fails to the lot of the cameraman to reproduce this hair-breadth escape, or that miraculous rescue, with the minimum of risk for the actor, and the maximum effect for the film.

bearing in mind the fact that the public must never be allowed to suspect trickery.

Your good cameraman makes himself expert in all branches of his craft. He must know how to build up and photograph interiors; he must have a broad sense of "landscape"; he must specialize in showing lovely woman even lovelier than she is. He must be constantly improving his methods of lighting for all these different types of photography, and bettering his methods of make-up and shading for the men and women whose faces form so large a part of his finished work.

Have you noticed the tremendous diversity of scene and subject contained in any one evening's entertainment at your local cinema? There will be in one film views of a beautiful countryside, dreaming portraits of some famous star, the shaded lamp glowing softly on her upturned face, lighting the wistful appeal of her features as she awaits, maybe, the coming of some handsome hero—for whose manly colouring and hard skin an entirely different lighting and make-up-system has to be thought out by some hard-working cameraman? Notice how cunningly the lighting of the boudoir-scene is contrasted with the love-scene on the terrace, or "matched up" with that little moment in my lady's ante-room!

There are a hundred-and-one different little "special jobs" which the cameraman must master. The proper lighting and photography of manuscripts, letters, and so on, for instance, is quite an art in itself. Or perhaps a close-up has to be made of a handshake, a gracefully-turned ankle, or the face of a watch; dozens of such little "bits" appear in films, and, if badly done, can look absurdly harsh and unnecessary.

His technical knowledge must be comprehensive enough to enable him, by moving his camera slightly, to enhance that star's height, to make this player appear slimmer; even to alter the colour of their eyes.

The director of a film certainly is in charge of its production. He conceives this, that, and the other scene; he rehearses the players in their movements and their lines. The art director builds glorious settings at his bidding. But he must lean most of all on the skill of his cameraman, for is he not, after all, making motion pictures?

It would take a book to describe all the various branches of camera-art as applied in the film studio. But bear in mind always that the cameraman, in order to please your eye, has carried consistently in his head questions of lighting, make-up, position, action, decoration, and distance. His work must never be for himself, in order to test some pet theory or wildcat scheme; he must always work for the best results possible with the material which the film itself gives him. He seldom figures in the headlines. His personal successes are seldom recognized by the public. He is just the man behind the camera; technical expert, craftsman, and artist.

SOUND RECORDING

The supervisor of the sound recording at the Radio Studio, Hollywood, relates a few of the eccentricities of friend "mike."

by J. V. MARESCA

The recording of sound has developed in many interesting ways, since that memorable night in 1926, when the Warner Brothers exhibited a sound-picture (in which the Metropolitan tenor, Martinelli, sang the popular "Vesti la Giubba," from Pagliacci), and decided to invest their tottering capital in talking pictures (a decision which enabled them later to put aside a trust fund for themselves of more than $3,000,000). The immediate success of Vitaphone pictures caused all the studios to throw over their production plans for the year and plunge into the business of making talking pictures. Large sums were spent. Hollywood was turned upside down with excitement. Some directors and stars failed to "click" in this new medium of expression, while others suddenly shot up to new heights.

The first results were poor. When the excitement had abated somewhat and the first pictures had gone forth to mumble their way through the theatres, studios settled down to the business of perfecting the sound devices with the result that, in a well-equipped theatre to-day, a properly recorded picture comes very close to the illusion that is desired.

The first sound tracks were made on wax records, just as in the manufacture of gramophone records. Copies could be made and shipped with the film, the theatre operator placing the disc on a turn-table that turned at a speed in proper ratio to the machine projecting the film. This was found to be unsatisfactory. Records became worn and voices were foggy and unintelligible. Also, there were difficulties in keeping the picture in synchronization with the sound. On the screen you sometimes saw a character open his mouth, but the words came a few seconds early or late, spoiling the effect. Now, however, pictures made with the new method do not get "out of sync," as we call it in the studios.

Following the wax record method came sound-on-film. It was found that sound waves could be photographed right on the edge of the film. This led to further complications. Room had to be made on the film for the sound track. This made the picture smaller. The size of the picture aperture and screen had to be changed. And when a sound-on-film picture appeared at a theatre where this had not been done, there was an ugly white margin at one side, not to mention a good view of the sound track running alongside the picture, looking like a very irregular Jacob's ladder. Then, to make matters worse, many theatres had only disc-record equipment and couldn't play the other pictures. All this led to changes in equipment in both theatre and studio, until the present method was reached.

Let us follow the recording of a talking-picture from the beginning. While the studios still use different systems, they are now nearly enough alike to be used in any theatre. R.K.O. studios uses what is known as the Photophone system, developed by the Radio Corporation of America, which is the system we shall follow here.

The camera is set up; the microphone, similar to the type used in broadcasting, is suspended from a long crane just out of the picture; the director places his people and the inevitable "Quiet, please!" is called.

In a soundproof booth the "mixer" watches through a window. Before him is a row of dials and meters. As the sound is picked up by the microphone it is sent through the mixing-booth as a fluctuating electric current, while the "mixer" studies its quality and strength. In this booth the current is amplified 1,000,000 times, so that it will record more clearly in the recording room. The "mixer" is in constant communication with the man at the microphone, and lets him know at once if the "mike" is not picking up the sound properly.

The recording room is in some out-of-the-way corner of the sound stage. Here, over a loudspeaker, you can hear every whisper on the stage outside. And here a very busy young man has numerous things to watch. Before him is the sound recorder, loaded with raw films. This machine is controlled by a motor that turns it at exactly the same speed as the camera on the set. The sound comes over wires from the mixing-booth.

The recorder, briefly, a machine which transforms the vibrations of electric current—received from the microphone—into a photographic picture of tiny sound waves. This is the picture, known as the "sound track" which I referred to above as being like a "very irregular Jacob's ladder." It is afterwards incorporated with the film and eventually projected with it when the film is screened.

The assistant recordist, who watches over the recording machine, is about the busiest man in the studio during the shooting of a scene. He must see that the mechanism is running smoothly. After each "take"—as the filming of a scene is called—he must select one of a row of ticket punches and punch the number of the scene on the film. This enables the cutter later to match the sound track with the picture of the same number. He must then fill out a report sheet on the recordings that are made. If he fails to do one of these things, trouble is sure to follow. If the machine falters in speed for a moment it will produce what is called a "wow." A wow is a jump in pitch, more noticeable in music than in recording the voice. As this would not be discovered otherwise until after the film has been developed, the speed of the recording machine must be constantly inspected.

The recording of sound on a separate film is one of the features of the Photophone system. When the final prints are made, the sound track and picture negatives are printed compositely on positive film. Similar copies are made and sent forth to the theatres. This dual film method facilitates the development of both picture and sound records.

Avoiding Echo

Reproduction of sound from the film is accomplished through a reverse photo-electric process to that described above. I do not intend going into the technical details of it more deeply, or I should fill a volume twice this size.

With the wax record system it was customary to run a "playback" of each take. The director heard the scene over a loud-speaker on the set immediately after it was shot. Now, however, it is left to the man in the mixing-booth, whose judgment is accepted. His "okay" signifies that the take sounded right as it passed through his booth. Many other forward steps have been made during the short life of sound-pictures. The ponderous camera booth is no longer used. Instead, a soundproof "blimp" covers the camera mechanism, the noise of which would otherwise be picked up by the sensitive microphone. It is made of cork and sponge rubber, found to be an effective combination to deaden sound.

The making of sound-pictures has been one steady march against trouble. Even the scenery has to be built of different material now. The old hard wallboard materials used to throw back an objectionable echo. Now some of the walls are made of cloth and other dead materials, which absorb sound instead of reflecting it. The arc lights, which spluttered, are electrically filtered in order to silence them.
Paper, under the microphone, must be dampened, otherwise its crackling is picked up like the report of a pistol shot.

When a company goes on location there is even more trouble. Here the exterior sounds cannot always be controlled. All the apparatus used on the sound stage is built in compact form in a large "sound truck." This portable equipment travels far away. Sometimes there is no line near by to furnish electricity, and a gasoline generator has to be used to run the motors which keep the recording and camera machinery going. Automobiles and any noisy machinery have to be silenced when possible, lest they spoil the take. Recently, during the filming of a night scene, men had to fire guns to silence the croaking of frogs near by, before each take.

The wind, however, cannot be stopped, so the microphone must be wrapped in a silk covering to keep out the sound of even the gentlest breeze, which would roar on the sound track. When the sound of wind is wanted, it is made artificially with a machine which is kept at the studio. The real thing doesn't sound right. The improvement of portable equipment has been of great importance to newsreels, where conditions are most unfavourable for recording.

One of the technical joys of sound, however, is that it can be controlled just as easily as heat, water, or electricity. It can be turned on or off, increased or weakened, and stored for future use. The sound-effects libraries of Hollywood contain almost every conceivable sound-effect, from steamboat whistles to hoofbeats. By the process known as "dubbing" (derived from "doubling") these can be put in the sound track at the desired spot.

This phase of sound—re-recording—is one of the most interesting developments of talking-pictures. For instance, a dancing couple may be photographed as they move about the floor, a travelling microphone following them to pick up their dialogue, while the orchestra that is playing the dance be recorded in another room, if necessary, the following day. As much of the music as is wanted, and as softly as required, can then be superimposed on the sound track of the dancing couple as background for their conversation.

The operator of the re-recording machine can do almost anything with the sound waves as they come through this machine from the original track. A low-pitched voice can be raised to a high, squeaky affair. Booming noises can be eliminated from speech. Whistles, bells, footsteps and shots can be "dubbed" in at will. This is especially convenient for location work, where the actual sounds cannot be picked up alone when wanted.

A love scene, for instance, might be very pretty if birds were to sing at the right moment. But birds cannot be persuaded to sing on demand. So the dialogue is shot on location and the film is returned to the studio, where the re-recording department, following the directions in the script, will put in the desired sounds, whether they be horses galloping, waterfalls, birds, or storms.

The success of talking-pictures has well warranted the expenditure of the millions which have been invested in sound equipment. Although many forward steps have been made since the beginning of talking-pictures, studio sound technicians are still actively engaged in seeking to improve the sound device until the illusion of people speaking on the screen before you will be absolutely perfect.
Admitted a master of his particular branch of film making, Otto Ludwig, who worked for a year at the A.R.P. Studios at Ealing, and has also edited American and German films, contributes this study of "cutting."

by Otto Ludwig

THE highbrows call it "montage." The film executives technically call it "film editing." And the workers in the studios call it "cutting."

It is all the same, whatever you call it. Each term signifies that chapter of a film's history in which it goes into the film editor's hands—very much in the way that meat goes into a sausage machine—and eventually comes out as a finished article, just as the sausage does.

It is a complicated business. The first time I went into a cutting-room I was appalled. But, like most difficult-looking things, it was not so hard to master as I at first thought, and I have now been a film editor for many years—in America first, then in England, and now both in England and on the Continent.

But to the uninitiated my job is rather like a jigsaw puzzle. I have to gain order out of chaos. Thousands of feet of film are handed over to me to be sorted out. The scenes are in no order whatever. I may receive the last scenes first; the beginning of the picture last.

From this medley of film sequences I have to make a coherent story, smoothly-running, interesting, and with correct film technique. By film technique I mean that due consideration must be given to those thousand-and-one items which make all the difference between a good picture and a bad one. Too many close-ups, with faces looming large upon the screen, would be disastrous, and in the same way too many sequences with the stars a long distance from the camera would be just as bad.

Every filmgoer must have experienced those pictures in which long "tracking shots" of a motor-car are shown. A "tracking shot" is one in which the camera is kept on the move—in the case of a car, running parallel with it, or ahead of it, or behind. In other words the camera travels with its subject all the time.

This type of "shot" is apt to make you feel dizzy if you're sitting in a darkened cinema.

It is bad editing. The "tracking shot" should be cut after a few seconds, then a close-up of the car shown for a moment or so. After this, the "tracking shot" can be joined on again. In this way the cinema-goer gains the sensations both of being a spectator and of actually being with the driver of the car, and is given a rest from that sickening sense of vertigo.

Similarly I saw a British film a little while ago in which two or three minutes were wasted while the camera followed a servant girl across a hall, up some stairs, through a door, and right up to the side of her mistress's bed.

It was an unnecessary waste of time. It struck me as being tedious. It would have been quite sufficient to have shown the girl leaving the servants' quarters and immediately switched over to the scene in which she entered the bed-room.

The term "film technique" covers such things as these, as well as a multitude of others. There is the accentuating of action and cutting out of speech; ensuring a brisk pace which, though really much faster than real life, looks natural on the screen; and balancing the "shots" carefully in order that the chief characters shall be more dominant than those who are not so important.

If you were to come into the editorial sanctum in the middle of a picture's cutting, you would probably wonder how on earth a film is ever completed.

The best way to realize how is to go on to the studio floor when the picture is being made.

"O.K.!" exclaims the director. The camera comes into operation and the microphones spring alive.

Before the actors make any move, a young man jumps from the side of the set with a board in his hand. On this board is marked the name of the picture, the name of the director, and the name of the assistant director. In addition there is a set of figures, which may be like this:

"A. Scene 98. Take 4.*

At the same time the boy will read out the same information for the benefit of the recording apparatus.

Then he skips out of sight of the camera as quickly as possible. At the finish of the scene another boy leaps forward, this one with two pieces of board in his hands, which are clapped together. This denotes that the scene is finished, the noise being sufficient to record this fact.

The former is the number boy; the latter the clapper boy. You never see them on the screen, though they are filmed hundreds of times a week.

Mysterious Rituals

Visitors to the studios often wonder why these mysterious rituals are performed every time.

Without the clapper boy I'm afraid it would be almost impossible to synchronize the sound with the action, for only by this mark on the film can we tell at which part of the photographed negative the sound negative should be attached. The sound track and the negative are separate, being joined later. As for the number boy, his little board is the clue which makes it possible for us to sort out the scenes. These boys are essential to us in the cutting-room.

"A. Scene 98. Take 4."

A notice such as this obviously explains that this scene is one numbered 98; every scene on the scenario is numbered and the numbers run into thousands. A man walking across a room is one scene. A close-up of him talking is a separate scene entirely.

"A" means that it is "A" camera. Sometimes there are two or three cameras, set at different angles. They are marked "A," "B," "C," etc., and if in the cutting I decide that a certain angle is the most suitable, I know exactly which piece of film to choose.

"Take 4" means that this is the fourth time that this particular scene has been filmed. Each scene is photographed at least three times, generally over the half-a-dozen times, often a dozen times and not infrequently twenty times. I have known a scene to be "shot" as many as thirty-five times before the director has announced his satisfaction.

Something might go wrong with several of the "takes." The star might mufi his or her lines. Someone may make an interruption. Perhaps the lighting will be wrong.

Sitting by the side of the director is the script girl. Her job is to report everything that happens, every action, every word of dialogue. If the scene is spoiled, she marks it N.G.

After the film has been developed, it is handed over to me. I am already familiar with the story. There is a script by my side, giving all the scenes. I am also supplied with comments from the script girl. I don't waste my time with those which have been marked N.G.

The scenes are passed over to me as soon as they have been developed. I don't get the whole of the film at once, though in some cases this has been known to happen. A colleague of mine at the Radio studios, where I used to work, recently had 175,000 feet of film suddenly dumped on him, which he was told would have to be reduced to 7,000 feet. The picture was Bring 'Em Back Alive, taken entirely in the Malayan jungle and brought back complete. It was a stupendous job editing that film!
As a rule, however, scenes are rushed over to me very soon after they have been "shot." Contrary to usually-accepted ideas, I don't immediately pick up a pair of scissors and begin snipping away at the film there and then.

The film is put through a machine, usually known as the moviola, which is an apparatus for projecting the film on to a small white background under a magnifying glass. It is geared at normal theatre speed but can be slowed down and stopped at will.

Every "take," except those definitely negatived, is studied under this machine. I make what is called a rough cut. Certain scenes must obviously come out. For example, the microphone is often visible and these "shots" must be cut.

Having made the rough cut, the shots that are left are projected on to the screen in the studio private theatre, with one or two officials watching—myself, the director, the cameraman and perhaps the star.

It is a strange experience for the outsider. Perhaps the scene is one showing the star sitting down to answer the telephone.

The scene is shown once. Then a second time, with such a slight difference that it is difficult to distinguish it from the first one. Then a third time, and so on, almost up to the number of "shots" taken—as I have said, perhaps half-a-dozen, perhaps a dozen, perhaps more. Only one or two will have been omitted at this stage.

We have to select from these "shots" the one which we consider the best. The star rarely has a say in the matter and it is left mainly to the film editor and the director to decide.

There are numerous things to be taken into consideration. The lighting; the recording; the camera angles; the acting.

It is an ironical business. The scene which is recorded best of all may be the one which is badly lighted. The one with the best acting is the one in which the recording has slipped up. The one in which the acting and the recording and the photography all come out perfectly may be ruined by the fact that the powerful act lights have caught a mirror and have reflected a dazzling ray across the scene right in the middle of the "shot."

The only way to get over these difficulties, if the best is wanted, is to do a little bit of juggling with the sound track and try to attach the sound track of one "shot" to the film of another "shot."

"Re-takes"

Sometimes, however, this cannot be done. It may be that not one of the scenes will be any good after all and the sequence in question will have to be filmed all over again. "Re-takes" are annoying things. I have often known one of the actors to have left the studio altogether. It may be difficult to get him back.

Maurice Chevalier was in New York when it was discovered at the end of one picture that certain scenes would have to be re-made. Engagements made it impossible for him to return for some time. So cameramen, director and other members of the cast who were in those particular sequences had to travel all the way across the continent to New York to re-make the necessary scenes there!

The picture was One Hour With You.

Once we have selected the best "shot," it is put aside until the other scenes come along. We go through the same process with each sequence, until at last every scene has been filmed and the best "takes" chosen.

Don't think, however, that the picture is completed by then. That's where my job really begins, for the real jigsaw work starts now.

With the assistance of the script, I know in just what sequence each scene should come. This is where the importance of the number boy becomes so obvious. Without that notification at the beginning of each "shot," it would be almost impossible to tabulate the scenes. As it is, each one is clearly numbered.

On the face of it, all I have got to do is to stick together all the scenes from number 1 to number 2,000, or whatever it is.

But things don't work out quite in this way.
To begin with, the picture is far, far too long. A scene that takes three minutes actually to “shoot” has to be cut down to half-a-minute. I have to use my judgment as to which parts of the scene shall be cut. If I cut too much, the scene will appear too jerky. If I don’t cut enough, the picture is going to drag and is going to run too long.

Sometimes, I can cut out whole scenes by careful juggling. Take, for example, when two people are introduced. Both say “How do you do!”

In a well-cut film, you never hear this courtesy. It is cut right out. Yet nine hundred and ninety-nine people out of every thousand who watch this scene on the screen will swear that the characters greeted each other with these formal words. It is a case of imagination filling the breach. It is quite sufficient to put in a brief shot of the host making the introduction and you need not even hear him doing this!

Having cut out unnecessary scenes such as this, I next turn to speeding up other scenes. A fight, for example. Every alternate “frame” (each negative is referred to as a “frame”) can be cut out. This makes the fight far quicker, and exactly halves the running time.

The picture now at a respectable length, there is still a lot of work left to be done. Many of the sequences can be twisted round entirely. Scene 99 may precede scene 40. Or maybe 40 and 41 will change round.

You have to look at it from a story point of view. Imagine for a moment that a man is sitting at his desk. He is about to be murdered and outside the house is the murderer, awaiting his chance to enter. Is it better to show the murderer first or the man about to be murdered? You have to take into consideration the whole trend of the story before deciding this. It may appear to be a trivial matter; but all these small points make the difference between a successful picture and a failure.

At last, the picture is ready for showing in its completed form; though not its final form.

As a complete film, it is shown time and time again to the director, the executives and the film editor. Perhaps the picture will be re-edited several more times. Certain points in the story may not be quite clear enough. And, although as a general rule it is the story that counts and not the star, there are instances in which the star must be taken into consideration.

If you have a player like Garbo you must stress her part. In a case like this, it is the star that counts more than the story and this is often the reason why big stars are accused of playing in mediocre pictures. The real reason is that the film editor has to play up to the star, a thing which I invariably avoid doing personally, for to my mind the story is the thing.

When the studio people are satisfied with the picture, it is “tried on the dog.” This crude expression is one used in the film business to describe the showing of a picture in an ordinary cinema when the audience is not expecting it.

If the audience doesn’t like the film (or any of the scenes) then the film editor gets to work once again. On many occasions, re-takes are even necessary. At this stage, it really is difficult to get hold of the cast once again. By this time, many of the players will have gone off elsewhere; many of them to different studios; some of them even to different countries!

If the film passes the audience successfully, it is at last ready for the censor.

Perhaps more trouble! The censor wants this altered and that deleted. Once more the film editor has to use his wits to make the film coherent and easy to watch.

Heavy Cutting

It is really amazing how much can be cut out of a picture even after it has been cut several times.

Just as an example—though I have no personal interest in this—there was the British serial, Lloyd of the C.I.D., which, after its editing, ran into about a dozen instalments of an average of half an hour each. The picture was generally released. A little while later the film editors had another go at it, and cut it down still more, with the result that it was re-issued as a single feature lasting one hour, under the title of The Green Spot Mystery.

When I first came to England, two already-cut pictures were handed over to me for revision. One was Never Trouble Trouble. I cut 1,000 feet out of it. The other was The W Plan. I relieved this of 2,500 feet.

It is sometimes quite a heart-breaking business. There is an expression in filmland which is genuinely tragic. It is "the face on the cutting-room floor." It refers to those actors and actresses who are cut right out of pictures. For one reason or another, it is found, after a picture has been completed, that their part is unnecessary. Thus are dreams and hopes felled with one snip of the scissors.

The film editor can do some extraordinary things with those strips of celluloid. He can even re-write the whole story by settling down to change all the scenes around; which is a lengthy but amusing pastime.

One of the classic stories of filmland is that of the film editor who made a complete film without the hero making a single scene for it. What the cutter did was to dig out all the star's old pictures and from them he obtained sufficient situations to enable him to work this hero into the leading part!

It is by no means unusual to change the stars around after a film has been produced. By careful adjustment, the second lead can be changed into the hero, mainly by cutting short the original hero's scenes and giving fuller length to the sequences played by the second lead.

Sometimes a girl—or a man—will "steal" a picture from the star. Her acting will be so good that she stands out, overshadowing the heroine completely. It is heart-breaking, I know, but unfortunately that girl's part often has to be toned down considerably in the cutting-room for the benefit of the star and the story.

I am happy to say, however, that in instances like this the studio executives, seeing the original negative, almost invariably make up for so cutting down the girl's part by giving her a contract and bigger chances in future pictures.

The film editor's job is certainly an interesting one. It is not merely mechanical; it is intensely human.
The film is complete. Here is a description of the dealings that take place before it finally reaches the screen—by a contributor who was president of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, 1931-32.

by REGINALD CROW

LITTLE known to the cinema public, but enormously fascinating, is that side of the industry which deals with the sales and distribution of films. When a film is delivered from the production studios, there follows a spell of feverish activity on the part of the firm (known as the "renters") who are to handle it.

It has to be determined, first of all, into what category the film falls. It may have had many thousands of pounds spent on it, yet may not be worthy to be labelled as a "super" production; it may have begun as quite a modest little affair, and yet have turned out so well that it is put across as a picture above the average. The film is seen many times by the firm's executives, but even then they are not always satisfied with their own judgment. So it is "tried on the dog." This means that the production is slipped into a programme in some outlying district. No preliminary boosting is given; the audience that happens to be at the showing is just lucky. Unheralded this film is put on the screen; but scattered throughout the theatre, sitting among the audience, are "scouts." Every comment made by the people around them is noted, and in this way some idea of the public's appreciation, or criticism, can be gleaned.

Having decided that the film is a "super," a "programme" (that is on the average level) or a "second feature" production, the trade shows are then held. These take place in each of the large towns, and of late years have assumed proportions undreamed in the past. Some of the evening productions held in London, for instance, develop into events approaching theatrical first nights. Many stories could be told of the use and abuse of what is primarily a private unspooling, made compulsory by the Cinematograph Films Act.

At these trade shows the cinema proprietors (known as the exhibitors) form their opinions on the merits and demerits of the picture. They try to judge if it will suit the particular audiences for whom they cater. A film that would suit, say, a Golders Green audience may be received in stony silence—or worse—at Luton.

Presuming, then, that the film deals with a subject that appears to be generally popular, there follows a tussle to book it. This little battle goes on between the exhibitors in each area — sometimes circuit-owned theatres versus independently-owned cinemas; sometimes between independents alone. More often, indeed, it is a combination of both.

Cinemas owned by one of the large circuits would appear to stand the best chance of securing the best products. But they are, in many cases, affiliated to a producing concern and have to surrender a large proportion of their "play dates" to their company's own films. It is obvious, therefore, that this allows plenty of opportunity to the independents, and levels matters up considerably; actually there is a chance for all the larger theatres to get a fair proportion of the "big pictures."

are usually content with "second runs," and often score on that account, the "first run" having served as a wonderful advertising medium. The tussle, therefore, between the "first-run" theatres and cinemas becomes a stern struggle when there is a much-wanted film. Competition is often so keen that the renter has an enormous job to preserve a spirit of equality and maintain his business relations with all his customers. He is eager, of course, to maintain the business rivalry between the bidders, but, at the same time, he has to hold a fair balance, and this is often done by arranging a "split"—i.e. a division of the "big films," between competing cinemas; as there is a large number of renters, this system works fairly well.

Films, as you will realize, are unlike articles of merchandise. It is impossible to buy, or, rather, hire them by the gross or dozen. Each one has to be bargained for and booked separately. The prices paid for the period of exhibition—three days, or a week, as the case may be—are now fixed on a "percentage of the takings" basis. This system came into force with the arrival of the talkies; previously, payment had been on a cash basis only.

Why did the talkies lead to this change? Because neither renter nor exhibitor had any data on which he could fix amounts. So now the bargaining that goes on between renter and exhibitor is to fix the rate of the percentage.

After the trade show, and during the period between that event and the date of the general release (which is usually some three or four months later), it has become customary to have a pre-release run in the West End of London. This serves two purposes. It helps to advertise the film, and also it gives the exhibitor outside London an opportunity to judge what sort of a reception it is given. After all, an audience of cinema-goers is vastly different from an audience consisting of members of the trade and their friends. An exhibitor can therefore get some idea of the way the public receives this film, although he knows full well, of course, that if he has a cinema in a small provincial town, the reaction to the production is likely to be totally different from that of the London audience. Sometimes, of course, provincial audiences do care for the most unexpected productions. That "glorious uncertainty" is one of the great attractions of a film exhibitor's life.

After the bargaining for the film has been completed, there is an enormous amount of work still to be done. The dates of the release have to be decided on; the prints of a film have to be ordered, and the number is governed, of course, by the popularity of the production. For a Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell film, for instance, there is always a terrific demand, and in consequence there have to be a large number of copies of the film printed. "Bars" are another ticklish problem. Let me explain this. An exhibitor, possibly, has paid a high price for a film which he thinks will make a lot of money. This high price covers protection for him, in that he is guaranteed that the film will not be sold to the owner of another cinema within a certain radius—at least, until he has shown the film.

When these many intricate problems have been satisfactorily solved, and a contract between the parties entered into, there comes a breathing spell. Posters are booked; publicity plans are decided on; all sorts of ideas to ensure the success of the production are thrashed out.

Eventually, a few days before the general release date, the dozens of brand new copies of the film arrive from the printers, ready for distribution to the exhibitor. Each "reel" of film is of one thousand feet or so, and is carefully packed in its own tin. Most feature films run into six to eight thousand feet, and so the separate reel tins are in turn enclosed, in a wood and metal "transport case," ready for despatch by road or rail to the various cinemas that have booked the film.

As a general rule, the release date in London is two weeks ahead of that in the country, and, on a popular booking, as many as 150 prints of the film are needed.

HOW A CINEMA IS RUN

The manager of the Empire Theatre, Leicester Square, London—one of the most luxurious of West End picture houses—describes the hundred and one duties which fall to the lot of one who controls a super-cinema. Duties whose sole aim is your comfort.

by H. W. CRULL

The cinema-manager, to most film-goers, is just a man in a dress-suit who stands in the foyer, bowing urbanely to occasional distinguished patrons, or waving an imperious hand to the brass-bound attendant. He looks decorative—but what does he do? The manager is paid to secure the comfort and contentment of his patrons. This means You.

In my own cinema, I am responsible for the comfort and happy entertainment of between 50,000 and 100,000 film-goers every week. In common with most other managers of super-cinemas, I find that it involves working about fourteen hours a day.

Let me describe an average day in the life of the manager of a "super." He arrives at the cinema at 9 a.m., in time to inspect the house thoroughly before the first show. He looks for defective bulbs in the dozens of house-lights which spangle the theatre. He scrutinizes seats, carpets and walls for any sign of slack work by the army of cleaning-men who work from midnight until 5 a.m., or the charwomen who follow them at 6.30 a.m. He will be in his place to watch the first show at ten o’clock. He listens carefully to the sound and notes the intensity of the picture-beam. If he detects any fault, he communicates at once with the projection-room. He satisfies himself that the programme is running satisfactorily, the lights are dimming and rising unobtrusively, and that a hundred details are faultless. Then he takes a last look round his gradually-growing audience, and moves off to his office.

There he finds the morning’s mail awaiting him. The manager of a "super" receives hundreds of letters from patrons each week. One will suggest a new tune for the organist to play in the interval. Another has left a pair of gloves behind. A third indulges in some fulminating criticism at the expense of the gentleman who smoked an ultra-violent cigar in the next seat to hers last Friday matinee. Many letters contain helpful and constructive suggestions and these the manager always welcomes.

When he has read these and the dozens of business communications which arrive with them, he spends hours until lunch-time dictating the answers, fixing appointments and arranging last-minute details in the day’s routine.

A hasty luncheon and the manager is back at his desk. Visitors arrive. First comes the representative of the sign-makers who look after the theatre signs. The manager goes over with him the designs for forthcoming display. Next come representatives from newspaper advertising departments; for the manager is, in many instances, responsible for the cinema's advertisements in the Press.

New curtains have been designed for the proscenium, and his next visitor brings him samples of material for the great drapes. The cinema-organist wishes to try a new programme of musical numbers and calls at the manager's office to discuss their suitability in relation to the week's programme.

So the afternoon passes. Meanwhile the manager will have found time to watch the progress of his matinee-show, receiving reports from the box office, as to the numbers admitted, the formation of queues, and so on. Throughout the day he maintains constant touch with his various officials. In all he may control as many as a hundred workers.

In my own cinema I have a "service staff" of forty. These, the uniformed men of the house, are under a chief of service, an assistant chief, and five captains, all being supervised by myself and my three assistant-managers. On the technical side there is the chief engineer, with his staff of six engineers and six electricians who are responsible for the lighting, ventilation, and general mechanics of the building. Then there is the chief projectionist, with his six assistants. He is lord of picture and sound, all matters relating to the projection and sound-system coming under his direct control. Special attendants placed about the auditorium keep a minute-by-minute log of the shows. They note down any breaks, in film or sound, any momentary failure of light, or, indeed, any of the dozens of tiny incidents which happen in even the best-run cinemas and which call for correction.

There is an accountant's department, with a chief accountant, a treasurer, a junior accountant, and six cashiers. In the restaurant there is a manageress and twelve waitresses; six chefs work in the kitchens below.

During my day I must find time thoroughly to inspect all these departments, as well as the tailor's shop in the basement, where the uniformed staff's liveries are valeted and kept in trim. The "service staff," in addition to their daily inspection by their own officers, parade weekly under the manager's eye. "Credits" are awarded to all those whose efficiency or conspicuous courtesy to patrons warrants special reward.

By the time the evening comes the manager will have watched the "change," as we call the exodus and influx of patrons between programmes. He keeps his ears open and catches many useful criticisms in the remarks of the departing film-goers as they leave the theatre.

The evening deepens in the streets outside. The manager, in that famous dress-suit, is still at his post. Sometimes there is the personal appearance of a star to be carefully stage-managed; or some celebrity may visit the cinema whose special comfort must be quietly arranged. Is the programme running right, to the nearest half-minute? Is that "short" providing the necessary contrast to the second feature which follows it? Does the big picture come easily and naturally on top of that? The staff are at their posts. The programme is running smoothly. The whole house, stalls and balconies, is well filled with contented patrons. The organist has played his big "number," or perhaps a stage-show has successfully paved the way for the big picture, now well under way.

A last look round his cinema and the manager walks through the specially-decorated display in the entrance-hall—another of his little efforts—and sets his face toward home. Time, 10.30 p.m.
Do you understand the organization of filmland?
Do you realize the amount of money involved in this industry which—in America at least—is the third greatest of its country?
Do you understand how the various producing companies have grown to their present importance?
In this article the writer has set out as briefly and simply as possible just how and by whom film production is sponsored.

by Mackenzie Winter

The ramifications of the motion picture world are great and puzzling. The finance of film-making is bewilderingly involved from the moment a man buys a share in a film company to the moment a film-goer pays his entrance fee at a cinema.

Let us begin with the production of a film. Few people realize how much it actually costs to produce a picture. A quarter of a million pounds is sometimes spent on a big spectacle such as Grand Hotel, although £80,000 is recognized as being a fair figure for a "super" film, £40,000 to £60,000 for a good programme picture, £10,000 to £20,000 for a less important production, or a "quickie."

Of these production figures, the actual negative on which a picture is "shot" is the least expensive. It rarely reaches five per cent of the total. Actors' salaries are generally reckoned to amount to twenty-five per cent of the total; ten per cent is approximate for the technical staff and perhaps five per cent for actual recording costs; ten per cent for scenario and story rights; twenty-five per cent for "sets" (scenery) and locations. The remaining twenty per cent or so is marked to overhead expenses.

These figures are semi-official. They are based on statistics given by Wills Hays, the "Tzar" of filmland.

General overhead expenses are a considerable item. When twenty per cent is allowed for this charge with each picture, this percentage applies only to the actual costs of the film in question, and not to the ordinary running expenses of the studio. Whether a picture is in production or not, money is still being spent on a scale which would make the average man gasp.

Executives are paid very high salaries. There are enormous staffs to maintain, ranging from technical men to publicity departments and manual workers—one studio even has its own police force—and there are always the basic costs of running a big building, such as lighting, rentals, and numerous other similar items.

Much is heard of the romantic climbs to sudden fortunes of the film stars themselves. Equally romantic are the stories of the men behind the films, the people who have built up the picture industry from humble little peep-shows in shops to the large palaces that exist to-day.

Many such men, most of them born in very humble circumstances, are to-day rich and famous.

Among the highly-paid film executives Louis B. Mayer, chief of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, receives over £3,000 a week, and Irving Thalberg, his vice-president in charge of productions, receives nearly £2,000 a week, plus a percentage of the profits.

These executives are worth every penny of the money they receive. They have gained their positions through great business acumen and hard work. Louis B. Mayer, who was in the salvage business before entering films, has done a great deal towards making Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer the important firm that it is to-day. Of Irving Thalberg it is no exaggeration to say that he is one of the most remarkable young men in the industry. He is shrewd and possesses both brains and courage. He controls the destinies of such stars as Greta Garbo, Clark Gable, Marie Dressler, Marion Davies, John and Lionel Barrymore, Norma Shearer, Joan Crawford, Ramon Novarro, and Wallace Beery; and his company has to its credit such outstanding masterpiece pictures as Trader Horn and Grand Hotel.

Almost every film company can point to at least one man who, by his perseverance and enterprise, is responsible for a company’s progress. And of each man a romantic story can be told.

"Uncle" Carl Laemmle.

Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Corporation, can look back on a career as exciting as any of the stories his concern has filmed. To-day he is a millionaire. Fifty odd years ago he was a boy in a stationer’s shop in a little country town in Germany.

He travelled steerage to America, with barely a penny in his pocket, and there worked in several shops before becoming book-keeper in a clothing store in Oshkosh. He eventually became manager of the business, but one day he saw his first motion picture.

It changed his whole life.

Crude though films were then, he was enchanted. He foresaw for them a golden future. Throwing up his job and borrowing money from a relative of his wife, he went into the film business. He opened a cinema in Chicago and soon realized that his forecast of a golden future for films was likely to come true. He began to make money.

He had difficulty in renting films; he bought them outright and then rented them to other exhibitors, thus entering the distributing side of the trade.
A business war between a powerful body that tried to monopolize the business led to the formation of the Universal Pictures Corporation, which began producing its own pictures. To-day the Universal company is still one of the biggest in Hollywood, with its own vast studios, and with Carl Laemmle still at its head, though his son is now in active charge.

Carl Laemmle's story is similar to many others in filmland.

There is, for example, William Fox, who founded the firm of Fox, still one of the most important producing companies, though Fox is not actively interested in it now. He entered the film business nearly thirty years ago, and was formerly a clothes presser in New York City. Motion pictures awakened a new enthusiasm in him. One day a local nickelodeon (as the first picture houses were called) was put up for sale. He bought it, though he had great difficulty in raising the necessary money. Later he bought other theatres and then formed a renting organization. Just before the war he founded the Fox Film Corporation, and became a millionaire.

There is also Sir William Jury, concerned with the English renting side of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer business. He was a London exhibitor in the earliest days of the screen when he first had the idea of distributing films. He began in a small way and eventually amassed a fortune. He gained his knighthood for his services as organizer of the supply of films for the British Armies. He was, towards the end of the war, in charge of the film propaganda department of the Ministry of Information.

He still has an office in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer building in London, although he has little need to work. Films have gained for him comfort and security.

One of the most powerful men in the British film industry is C. M. Woolf, Joint Managing Director and Deputy Chairman of the Gaumont-British Picture Corporation.

His story goes back to those days when films were very new. He was originally associated with a friend named Freedman. They were furriers, but they foresaw a future for films, and they started a distributing agency in London, known as W. & F. films, the two giving their initials to the name of this still-existent firm.

For the most part films were sold in the saloon bars of the public houses in the Soho district. But slowly the business grew and the firm of W. & F. became more important. To-day, Freedman is dead, but Woolf remains a power behind the British screen.

There is another British film magnate who, though he has not worked his way up from very humble beginnings as have so many other important film people, is nevertheless a romantic figure. He is John Maxwell, chairman and managing director of British International Pictures. He is one of the most distinguished figures in the industry, for it was mainly due to his foresight and enthusiasm that British films turned the corner after the long period of slow development following the war.

John Maxwell was a solicitor practising in a small Scottish town, and he was shrewd and a clever financier. He saw the potentialities of the cinema, and began, first of all, in a small way, buying theatres. Soon he had a group of important houses. He then gave his attention to distributing and became associated with Wardour Films (now a subsidiary of British International Pictures, with Woolf as its managing director). He transformed this then small company into one of the most important in Great Britain.
Men and Money Behind Pictures

Theatres—renting—the next logical step was the production of pictures. And Maxwell formed British National Pictures, with studios at Elstree. The company was the forerunner of the powerful British International Pictures. When British International was young, British films were in a bad way. B.I.P. was one of the few companies to produce anything worth while. It did more than any other company to put British films on a higher footing than for many a long year. And now British International has its own allied chain of theatres, the A.B.C. Circuit.

Adolphe Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Jack and Harry Warner, Samuel Goldwyn and many others have equally romantic stories to tell of fortunes amassed from the screen. Their histories are equal only in interest to the stories of the film companies themselves. Countless companies are involved one with another, and many of the producing companies are now owners of big groups of cinemas.

Here is a chart which gives an example of how many companies can ultimately be linked up.

This talking picture enterprise is known generally as the Radio Company. Similarly, there is the Western Electric Company. This descends, via the Bell Telephone Laboratories and the Electrical Research Products Inc., from the American Telephone and Telegraph; it is also connected with the International Telephone and Telegraph, the Standard Telephone and Telegraph, the Standard Telephone and Cables, and, if you care to pick your way carefully through the various interesting ramifications, with Warner Brothers and Vitaphone!

The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer concern has no fewer than about 140 separate corporations headed under the parent company. These include numerous producing and distributing companies, the Culver Export Corporation, and about thirty affiliated companies; the Robbins Music Corporation; and nearly one hundred corporations covering vaudeville productions, real estate, and other activities. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer itself is the off-spring of several companies.

First of all, there is Metro. This producing company was organized in 1915. It became an influential one, with theatres of its own, and was taken over by Loew’s Incorporated, the giant theatre organization, in 1920.
The Goldwyn company was formed in 1916, and became equally as powerful as Metro, with its own chain of theatres. It was consolidated with Metro in 1924. The third of the companies, the Mayer company, was organized in 1920, and soon became an important producing unit, with such stars as Ramon Novarro and Norma Shearer. This company joined up with the two others also in 1924, and since that date the firm has been known as Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Loew's Incorporated itself is still at the head of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, although the Loew Theatre circuit is a separate subsidiary. This large organization grew out of a penny arcade, which was opened in 1905 by Marcus Loew and David Warfield.

It was in 1913 that the Paramount company first saw the light of day, though it was not known under that name then. In the middle of December, 1913, Jesse L. Lasky bought a barn in Hollywood and transformed it into a film studio. The company was known as the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company.

Earlier in the year Adolphe Zukor had organized the Famous Players Film Company, and soon these two companies joined forces and became known as the Famous-Players-Lasky.

With other interests, this company has acquired large theatre chains in many countries. It has production interests in New York, Great Britain, and Paris as well as in Hollywood. It has renting organizations all over the world. It changed its name some years ago, after an amalgamation, and though to-day Lasky is not connected with the firm, Adolphe Zukor is still its president.

The other companies have spread in similar fashion, as can be traced by the stories of some of the magnates of whom I have already written—William Fox and Carl Laemmle, for example. With the single exception of Carl Laemmle's Universal company, every picture organization in America has gone through numerous changes and affiliations before reaching the position it is in to-day.

Only in rare instances does one man possess a complete holding in any one company. In this country one of the most powerful film magnates is Isidore Ostrer, President of Gaumont-British, who owns a very large number of his company's shares. He entered the film trade through the financial world.

This company has its subsidiary film interests in England, to which I shall refer in a moment; it has important links with the powerful German U.F.A. company; and you can also trace strong financial interests in newspapers and radio.

I will now revert to the financial side of films themselves. By the time a picture is shown to the public, it has passed through other hands besides those at the studio. A film must be distributed—that is to say, sold to the cinemas. It requires a large organization to do this, an organization which concerns itself with the renting side of the business.

The producing company generally has a distributing company of its own (a subsidiary of the parent company), which receives the pictures, and sells them to the cinemas. It takes a certain percentage of the receipts for this work. Thus, in Britain, there is the Gaumont-British parent company, which has under it three separate renting organizations: Gaumont,
W. & F., and Ideal. Generally, Gaumont distributes the Gaumont-British films, produced at the company's studios at Shepherd's Bush. W. & F. and Ideal share between them the output of an associate producing company, Gainsborough, with studios at Islington. The three companies also take films from other independent producing organizations.

Selling talking pictures is anything but a clear-cut business. There are no hard and fast rules. No two cinemas pay the same price for a film. In the old silent days the cinema manager would be asked to pay a certain sum for a picture, according to the size of his theatre. He might be asked to pay £50 for three days, and that was the end of the matter.

Now, however, films are rented on a percentage basis. A company might ask for 40 per cent of the receipts for a very big picture; 30 per cent for a less important one. "Second features"—rather unimportant productions, or fairly old big ones, put in programmes to support the main attraction—are let out for a sum agreed upon by the cinema manager and the renting company. The price may be anything from £15 to £150 for three days, according to the size of the hall and the district.

There was a fierce price war when Charles Chaplin asked for 50 per cent of the receipts for his picture, City Lights. The theatre side of the Gaumont-British Corporation (a vast organization, with 325 cinemas in this country and new ones being planned) refused to book it on this basis, stating that it would not pay them to do so. The Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association (the association of the cinema managers) backed Gaumont-British, and advised its members not to pay more than 331/3 per cent.

Chaplin declined to abate his terms, and there the matter stood until the A.B.C. circuit—the large theatre organization run in conjunction with British International Pictures—agreed to take it on a 50-50 basis. Thus Chaplin won through, though his picture was not, perhaps, seen at so many cinemas in this country as it would otherwise have been.

The percentage charged on films is, of course, lower when the pictures are getting old. The price goes down gradually from the first week of "general release." A stated sum is paid for "pre-release runs"—the exclusive showing of a picture before its general release. The amount varies considerably. One cinema may take £5,000 in receipts in a week, whereas another takes only half that, and the prices paid for films vary accordingly. For instance, the Empire, London, took over £10,000 in one week when a Greta Garbo picture, Mata Hari, was showing.

Further, a film programme consists not merely of one big film, or even of one feature and one second-feature. There are the news reels and comedies to consider, and perhaps a stage show. "Shorts" cost £4 or £5 for three days, but a stage show may cost anything from £5 to £500 for the same period.

When you remember that in one week London alone has spent as much as £300,000 to see talkies; that there are 3,600 cinemas in the British Isles; that there are over 20,000 cinemas in America, it is possible to realize how large a profit a £40,000 picture can make even if distributed on a 25 per cent of receipts basis to a comparatively small percentage of those cinemas.

When a film-goer pays his humble money through a cinema box-office window, he is putting it into a far vaster and more involved machine than he ever dreams!
NEWS ON THE SCREEN

The development of the "News-reel" has been one of the most marked of recent developments in the film world. Sound has considerably increased its interest until to-day there are theatres devoted entirely to news pictures. The fascinating history of the rise of the news-reel is told in this article.

by J. SMITH-ROSS

Although organized efforts to keep the public supplied with news-films could not be made until the cinema was established as a place of amusement, the news-film itself began its career soon after the motion picture camera was invented. One of the earliest subjects to be covered by a screen reporter was Queen Victoria's funeral. This film, in common with others of the time, had to depend for its sales on peep-shows and one or two enterprising music-halls. It was nothing more than a badly-produced stunt and could be run through in a little over three minutes.

People did not then expect the popularity of films to last. Everyone said they were just a novelty. Financiers and business men, who might have placed the industry on a sound footing, at first ignored it entirely. The progress of the news-films had thus to depend on the effort of a few showmen who took them when and how they could and invariably for their own side-shows. There was no fixed object or policy in the minds of those pioneers; if their films dealt with news at all, it was only because the means provided them with a cheap method of showing spectacular scenes.

The first company to devote the whole of its activities to the making of news-films was Pathé Frères, founded in 1910. At first this company had all its reels developed and printed in France, and films depicting British news could not be shown to audiences in this country until about three weeks after the events. Such news-films, however, proved an instant success with cinema-goers, many of whom had by then developed the habit of paying a weekly visit to their nearest cinema.

For technical developments the news-reel has depended largely on other branches of the industry, but in questions of celerity it has had to learn its own lessons. Its first achievement in this direction was the release of a weekly news-reel. Later, two editions a week were sent out and, finally, events of national interest, such as the Derby, were filmed and shown the same day.

The introduction of sound greatly enhanced the fascination and scope of the news-film; it brought greater reality to the screen, introduced cinema-goers to the voices and views of world-renowned men, lent greater emphasis to the old adage "the camera cannot lie," and captured local colour in a way which the sound film had never been able to do.

The first company to adopt this new medium was British Movietone News, formed in 1929. One of the initial problems that confronted this company was the question of fast transport. The talkie equipment, which then weighed well over a ton, had to be moved slowly, and was installed with great precision and much waste of time. It limited their output; and their first films consisted of only two items, the Trooping of the Colours and the Derby. It was not until the whole equipment was packed neatly into a fast-moving vehicle that a news editor could send his screen reporters anywhere at any time. Some indication of the progress which has been made in this direction is given by the fact that the sound news-reel has now equalled all the records of the silent film, and such events as the Grand National and Cup Final are heard and seen at the principal cinemas some three hours after they take place.

There is no very great dissimilarity between the routine of the news cameraman and the newspaper reporter, except that one creates his impressions with a pen, and the other with a camera. Scoops and exclusive stories mean the same to both, for they are both sent on their errands by editors who, in turn, get their information from the same sources.

Time is just as important to the screen reporter as it is to the newspaper man. If the latter has to fly in the air for his story, the former can follow to-day with almost equal facility. In many instances the screen man uses a hand-camera and adapts the sound later. The outdoor staff of the news-reel company generally consists of about a dozen men. Three or four fast sound-trucks or vans are in constant use, and twenty subjects a week are invariably covered. Of these the editor chooses six, and having linked them together, sends the finished film to the laboratories to be reproduced. Generally 200 copies are made, each of which is shown at about 5 cinemas, and then scrapped (with the exception of one copy which is carefully preserved in a library). The cost of renting a film for its first three days' run is about £10, the value diminishing as the subject grows older. Thus on the third week, the cinema need pay as little as £3 for a news-reel.

No review of this subject would be complete without some reference to the ever-growing popularity of cinemas which devote their programmes entirely to news-films. One of these, with a seating capacity of 500, recently reported that over 2,000,000 people had paid for admission in the course of two years. As with most other films the news-reel makes entertainment its principal object, but it is impossible to overlook its historical and educational value. Recently this aspect was brought home very vividly by Pathé Pictures, Ltd. (formerly Pathé Frères), who marked the occasion of their twenty-first birthday by showing a film consisting of cuttings from news-reels taken during the company's long and eventful career. Among the subjects it portrayed were the Coronation of King George V. and the Investiture of the Prince of Wales. It was as though by some miraculous effort the clock had been reversed and we were travelling back over the roads of yesterday. It had its romantic qualities, of course, but it was as a true historian that the film earned its highest praise.
Interesting Facts About Films

Royalty and the Film

Royal interest in colour films was shown as early as July, 1909, when King Edward VII and H.M. Queen Alexandra witnessed a command exhibition of pictures in kinemacolour at Knowsley, Lancs.

Christmas Cheer, a two-reel comedy released in 1929 and starring "Sunny Jim," the four-years-old actor, was the first all-talking picture made specially for Christmas presentation.

Sound in Films

There are many words banned in talkies owing to their unsuitability for reproduction, words such as soldiers, kiss, and pleasure. In addition to these, artistes often add their own list of words which they personally find difficult to pronounce.

There are eighteen sound systems on the market.

When talkies were first introduced all the camera equipment was placed in closed boxes with glass fronts through which the "shooting" was done. (It was not an unusual incident for cameramen to faint in these boxes owing to the intense heat.) These have since been discarded, and only the top part of the camera is now enclosed in a sound-absorbing box.

To avoid the usual noise of rain, which through the microphone sounds like thunder, hoses fitted with finely punctured nozzles are attached to water valves. These eject the water in vapour form and in addition to giving the desired appearance, create no noise.

The sound of a kiss, unless exaggerated purposely, is rarely picked up by the microphone.

The first complete recording plant for a talking motion picture made at sea was used for "Só Long, Letty." The equipment was placed on a barge which accompanied the yacht bearing the artistes.

Film Studios

The largest studios in Europe are the U.F.A. Studios in Germany.

WARNER Studios have four miles of paved streets, 21 miles of lead-covered cable for recording, and 4,222 horse-power delivering plant, enough for a city of more than 10,000 people.

The Derby was transmitted on June 1, 1932, and was seen by a thrilled audience on a special screen 10 ft. wide and 8 ft. high.

Wide Screen

It is probably only reticence on the part of producers that is responsible for the slow progress made by the wide screen. Doubtless it is felt that the cost of new equipment coming so soon after the talkie revolution would impose a burden on exhibitors which they are not at present prepared to shoulder.

The Bat Whispers, shown at the Regal Cinema recently, was photographed on a film 65mm. wide, then reduced to standard size, thus achieving the wide film effect with sharper definitions. The screen on which this was shown was 31 ft. wide and 16 ft. high.

MODEL SHOT. Shots of buildings, etc., made to scale on a small size.

MONTAGE. A word used to denote quick cutting climaxing in a mood or effect.

NIGGER. A camera board or screen used by the cameramen to mask off the glare from the lights. (See also Gobo.)

NUMBER BOARD. A board held in front of camera before scene starts. It helps the film editor to recognize the sequence when cutting. Reads, for example; “Married Life.” Director: A. Smith. Scene 75. Camera: L. Brown. Date:

N.G. Marked on the back of the number board and held up to the camera if the scene is “no good.”

O.K. for SOUND. “The scene was all right for recording—no sound flaws.”

O.K. All right—good! All correct.

OVERHEAD RAILS. Enable smooth movement of camera and other objects over a fair distance; also used to transport heavy scenery.

P

PAINTER. One who paints the sets or scenery.

PAN. To move camera head to follow someone, or move camera head up and down—camera itself remaining stationary.

PAN CAMERA. “Take a moving shot.”

PAN STOCK. Special Panchromatic Film Stock.

TO BE PANNED OR RECEIVE A PANNING. A bad criticism.

PLATES. The film used for photographs.

HOW TO USE THE INDEX

This complete index to "The World Film Encyclopedia" will enable the reader to find at a glance where to turn for any information contained in the foregoing pages. After the name of each actor or actress are given references to the pages in which his or her biography, address, birthday, marriage, and first film are mentioned, where such information is available. The main facts of the articles are all indexed under easily-found headings, and the most famous films—casts of 500 of which are included in the encyclopedia—are indexed under their titles.
